Foreword

In recent years the Chinese and Korean Section, Orientalia Division, has received frequent inquiries about its Chinese-English and English-Chinese dictionaries. Doubtless this is due to a heightened interest in China and Chinese studies, the growing number of American students enrolling in Chinese language courses, and the high volume of new dictionaries being published in Hong Kong, Taiwan, and the People's Republic of China. The situation clearly reflects the need for a comprehensive bibliography to compile these items and make them more widely accessible.

The present work is designed to meet this need. It contains an annotated list of the Library of Congress's holdings of Chinese-English and English-Chinese dictionaries and glossaries on all subjects, as well as certain polyglot and multilingual dictionaries with English and Chinese entries. Obviously no such list can be exhaustive. Included are general dictionaries; encyclopaedic dictionaries; comprehensive dictionaries; vocabularies; word lists; syllabaries; lists of place names, personal names, nomenclature, phrases, sayings, proverbs; and special glossaries of scientific and technical terminology. No subject restriction was used in compiling the list. Excluded, however, are Chinese dictionaries limited to the Chinese language and Chinese dictionaries with equivalents in other languages, but not in English. The scope is also confined to works in the holdings of the Orientalia and the general collections.

The bibliography will fulfill the hopes of the compiler if the Congress and other government agencies and organizations, librarians, scholars, and students, as well as the general public find it a useful and convenient instrument for their needs. For those who are working directly with the collection, this bibliography will provide an analytical guide to the Library's large and scattered dictionary resources of the type described above. Translators, in particular, should find this bibliography a helpful aid, for the subjects of translation are multifarious and all pervasive, and equivalents in different languages for general as well as specialized terminology are subject to constant change in the standard forms, while new terms and expressions are ever evolving and coming into common usage. Every effort has been made to follow the guidelines of efficiency and flexibility in order to encompass the rich diversity of natural and technical language categories. To accomplish these objectives, the format combines subject and indicial

Suggestions or comments from users of this bibliography will be appreciated.

Explanatory Notes

A total of 569 numbered entries are contained in this bibliography. Since nearly all of these works have been cataloged for Library of Congress cards, the entries are under the LC main entry as found on the cards. Listed under two separate sections, the entries are arranged alphabetically under subheadings of the broad categories of Special Subject Dictionaries and General Language Dictionaries. For quick and convenient checking, two indexes are provided—author and title. These are followed by a Chinese-character author and title list which is arranged consecutively by entry number; however, English-language entries have been omitted from this list. The two indexes and the author and title list were prepared by Edith Terry, Chinese and Korean Section, Orientalia Division.

In accordance with the LC manual of bibliographic style, the heading for each entry contains the essential bibliographic data taken from the corresponding LC catalog card. The Chinese titles are given in Wade-Giles romanization. If the English title and/or the title in Pinyin romanization appear in the original work, they are also provided. When there is no English title, the English equivalent of the Chinese title is supplied in brackets. The bibliographic information also includes the author, the place of publication, the publisher and date of publication, the pagination, and when available, the series information. The call number may be either according to the LC classification system or the pre-1958 Chinese classification system formerly used for cataloging books in the Chinese collection. "DLC" (see 20, 172, 345, 367) is used to indicate that a book was in the holdings of the Library but was not yet cataloged and did not have a call number.

In a subheading, in parentheses, the languages included and the arrangement of the languages are specified, such as "Chinese-English," or "Latin-Chinese," along with information about the various language indexes which may appear in the dictionary. When a dictionary provides "encyclopedic" treatment of its entries and explanatory annotations are given in a particular language, that language is set forth in capital letters, such as "CHINESE-English."

The annotations describe the approximate number of entries in the work, the subject categories covered, the dictionary's format and arrangement, the relationship with other dictionaries, the identity of the author, and previous editions, and present other information about the work which may be available and of interest.

Accounting

Chi, Tse-hua. Ying Hua Hua Ying k'uai chi ming tz'u tz'u tien. English-Chinese dictionary of accounting. Hong Kong, Hsiang-kang wan li shu tien, 1964. 402 p.

HF5621.C5 Orien China

(English-Chinese, Chinese-English)

Contains about 4,000 entries for modern accounting terms. The English-Chinese section is alphabetical, and the Chinese-English section is by stroke number. There is an appendix of about 300 common abbreviations used in accounting from English to Chinese.

2

Liu, Chung-ch'ien. T'ung yung k'uai chi tz'u shih. [Commonly-used accounting terms explained] Hong Kong, Liu Chung-ch'ien k'uai chi shih shih wu so [Lau Chung Him] 1963. 5, 81, 14 p. HF5621.L73 Orien China

(CHINESE-English, with English index)

A selected glossary of about 300 commonly-used accounting terms with annotated explanations in Chinese, arranged according to subject category, including terms of 1) general principles of accounting, 2) books and ledgers, 3) report accounting, 4) classification of accounts, and sole ownership and joint venture accounts, 5) joint stock company accounts, and 6) manufacturing accounts and cost accounts. Each entry also provides the English equivalent of the Chinese term. These are alphabetically listed in an English-Chinese index.

P'an, Hsü-lun. K'uai chi ming tz'u hui i. [Glossary of translated accounting terms] [4th rev. ed.] Shanghai, Li hsin k'uai chi t'u shu yung p'in she, 1951. 206 p. (Li hsin k'uai chi ts'ung shu) HF5621.P26 1951 Orien China

(English-Chinese, with Chinese index)

Contains about 2,700 entries, about 400 more than the previous edition. Half of the entries are strictly on accounting, and the other half are accounting terms related to the fields of law insurance, and industrial-commercial organization and management. There is an elaborate Chinese index, arranged by "key word" of the various terms, and listed in groups according to stroke number.

4

Yeh, Yü-chen. Ying Han k'uai chi shang yeh shu yü. [English-Chinese accounting and business expressions] Taipei, Cheng Shih-ch'ing [1965] 217 p. HF5621.Y4 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

This glossary contains about 8,000 entries for modern accounting and business terms and expressions, listed alphabetically in English with Chinese translation and sometimes brief parenthetical explanations in Chinese. The terms were collected from American accounting and business books and periodicals, regulations and documents, and bilingual dictionaries. Other fields related to accounting and business are also covered, including auditing, banking, finance, taxation, international trade, insurance, stocks, U. S. aid, and law.

Acoustics

Chung-kuo k'o hsüeh yüan. Tzu jan k'o hsüeh ming tz'u pien ting shih. Sheng hsüeh shu yü. [Acoustics terminology] Peking, K'o hsüeh ch'u pan she, 1958. 205 p.

QC225.C6 Orien China

(CHINESE-Russian-English, with Chinese, Russian, and English indexes)

Compiled under the corporate author's earlier name: Chung-kuo k'o hsüeh yüan. Pien i ch'u pan wei yüan hui ming tz'u shih. Contains about 800 entries of acoustics terminology, arranged by topics, which include: 1) General terms, 2) transmission and broadcast of sound waves, 3) transmission system and transmission components, 4) ultrasonics, 5) physiological acoustics, 6) speech, 7) musical acoustics, 8) architectural acoustics, 9) sound recording and sound reproduction, 10) underwater sound, 11) ordinary acoustical instruments, 12) shock and oscillation, and 13) acoustical units. There are three indexes: Chinese according to stroke number, Russian according to the Cyrillic alphabet, and alphabetical in English.

Aeronautics

Chiao t'ung pu chiao t'ung yen chiu so. Min yung hang k'ung pien shen hsiao tsu. Chiao t'ung ming tz'u tz'u tien. Min yung hang k'ung lei. [Glossary of communications terminology: Civil aviation] [Taipei] Chiao t'ung pu chiao t'ung yen chiu so [1968] 95, 30 p.

TL509.C46 1968 Orien China

(English-CHINESE, with Chinese index)

Contains about 1,600 entries of communications terminology related to civil aviation, listed alphabetically English-Chinese, with brief explanatory annotations in Chinese for each entry. There is a Chinese index according to stroke number, a list of abbreviations, and a table of equivalents for weights and measures. This is one of a series of eight glossaries on communications, the others covering highways, railroads, telecommunications, postal administration, water transport, harbors, and meteorology.

Gerr, Stanley. Japanese-Chinese-English dictionary of aeronautical and meteorological terms, including aero- and hydrodynamics, airplane construction and stress analysis, propellor theory, internal combustion engines, airports and ground installations and meteorology, with a section in kana. New York City, G. E. Stechert [1945] 439 p. TL509.G4

(Chinese-Japanese-English; plus separate Japanese-English section)

Contains about 11,000 entries of aeronautical and meteorological terms, arranged in Chinese-Japanese-English format according to radical, the Japanese equivalents being given in Hepburn romanization. Subjects covered include aero- and hydrodynamics, airplane construction and stress analysis, propellor theory, internal combustion engines, airports and ground installations, and meteorology, and also fields bearing directly on aeronautical science, such as theoretical mechanics, mechanical and electrical engineering, metallurgy, structural engineering, and chemistry. There is a small section in kana, Japanese-English.

8

Li, Ti-min. Hang k'ung ming tz'u tz'u tien. Dictionary of aviation. [Compiled by Li Timin and Jen Yüeh-han] Taipei, Wu chou ch'u pan she [1972] 448 p.

TL509.L5 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

Contains about 40,000 entries of aviation terms, listed alphabetically English-Chinese. Includes terms selected from fields related to aviation, such as physics, chemistry, machines, industry, and meteorology.

9

TL509.U674

(Chinese-English, with Chinese character index) Contains about 12,400 entries of terms in the fields of aviation in space, arranged in Chinese-English format according to the Pinyin romanization. Included are not only terms relating to aeronautical engineering, general aviation, rocket engines, and astronavigation, but also vocabulary from the related basic sciences of telecommunications, metallurgy, welding, and aircraft construction. There is a Wade-Giles to Pinyin conversion table, and a Chinese character index according to stroke number.

This was to be the first of a series of Chinese-English technical dictionaries, and was to be revised and enlarged to exceed 20,000 terms. Other subject areas in the series were to cover nuclear physics, automation and computer technology, electrical and mechanical engineering, surveying, mapping and meteorology, telecommunications, electronics, and rocketry. The U. S. Air Force, Foreign Technology Division, issued the "nuclear and physics dictionary" in 1971 (see 345), in continuation of the work of dictionary compilation formerly undertaken by the Aerospace Technology Division, Library of Congress.

Ying Han hang k'ung liu t'i tung li hsüeh tz'u hui. [English-Chinese aviation fluid dynamics glossary] [Compiled by Mikhail Grigor'evich Kotik, and translated by Huang Shao-ling and others] [Peking] K'o hsüeh ch'u pan she, 1974. 250 p. TL570.3.Y56 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

Based on the English-Russian aviation fluid dynamics glossary published by the Soviets in 1960, this glossary contains about 12,000 entries of aviation fluid dynamics terms, listed alphabetically English-Chinese. Included are terms relating to sonic speed, transonic speed, supersonic speed, ultra-high speed, experimental aerodynamics, ground fluid dynamics research, equipment used in flight experiments, and survey equipment. Appended are a list of symbols, a list of abbreviations, and a list of often-seen names of British and American authors on aerodynamics.

Agriculture

Chung-kuo k'o hsüeh yüan. Tzu jan k'o hsüeh ming tz'u pien ting shih. Ying Han nung hsüeh ming tz'u. Ying Han nongxue mingci. [Glossary of agricultural terms] Peking, K'o hsüeh ch'u pan she, 1959. 21 p. S411.C45 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

Compiled under corporate author's earlier name: Chung-kuo k'o hsüeh yüan. Pien i ch'u pan wei yüan hui ming tz'u shih. Designed for the purpose of coordinating with the Great Leap Forward movement in agricultural science and technology, and compiled by two members of the Northeast Agricultural Institute, this dictionary contains about 1,300 agricultural terms, mostly non-technical, listed alphabetically in English, with their Chinese equivalents. The glossary was published with a view to ultimate incorporation into a larger dictionary of agricultural terms.

Alkaloids

Shan-hsi sheng Wei-nan ti ch'ü Chung i hsüeh hsiao. Ying Han sheng wu chien tz'u hui. [English-Chinese glossary of alkaloid terms] [Peking] K'o hsüeh ch'u pan she, 1973. 140 p. OD421.S55 1973 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

Originally compiled in 1965 and revised in 1972, the glossary contains over 2,000 terms arranged alphabetically in English-Chinese format. In addition to the Chinese rendering of the English term, each entry contains a classification number denoting one of 59 categories to which the particular alkaloid belongs, as: (1) aliphatic amine alkaloid; (2) phenyl-alkylamine alkaloid, etc. Each entry also contains such data as: the molecular formula; melting point; rotary polarization rate; and from which plants the alkaloid can be obtained.

Anatomy

Comparative Anatomy

Kuo li pien i kuan, Taipei. Pi chiao chieh p'ou hsüeh ming tz'u. [Comparative anatomy terminology] [Shanghai] Cheng chung shu chü QL9.K85 Orien China [1948] 213 p.

(English-Latin-Japanese-Chinese)

Contains 6,013 numbered entries of technical terms in the fields of comparative anatomy, vertebrate zoology, and anatomy of domestic animals, more than half of the terms being the same as for human anatomy. The format is in five columns: the number of the entry, the English term, the old Latin term, the term in Japanese, and the approved term in Chinese. The entries are listed alphabetically by the term in English.

Human Anatomy

Jen t'i chieh p'ou hsüeh ming tz'u. [Human anatomy terminology] [Compiled by Chung yang jen min cheng fu. Wei sheng pu. Wei sheng chiao ts'ai pien shen wei yüan hui.] Peking, Jen min wei sheng ch'u pan she, 1954. QM81.J42 Orien China 185 p.

(Chinese-Latin; Latin-Chinese)

Contains about 5,000 entries of human anatomy terminology, based on B.N.A. (Baseler Nomina Anatomica), with revisions according to J.N.A. (Jenaer Nomina Anatomica). In two parts: Chinese-Latin according to stroke number; and Latin-Chinese, listed alphabetically.

Wei, Yung-k'ang. Jen t'i i ming tz'u tien. The terms of human body. Hong Kong, Wan li shu tien [1968] 565 p.

QM81.W37 Orien China

(Latin-Chinese; Chinese-Latin)

The text of of this dictionary is a rearranged version with the same terms contained in Jen ti chieh p'ou hsüeh ming tz'u (Human anatomy terminology) (see 14), published in Peking in 1954. Thus it also contains about 5,000 entries of human anatomy terminology based on B.N.A. (Baseler Nomina Anatomica) and J.N.A. (Jenaer Nomina Anatomica). The arrangement, however, is first in Latin-Chinese, listed alphabetically, and then Chinese-Latin according to stroke number. The preface was revised in the new version, as was also the pagination.

Veterinary Anatomy

16

Chung-kuo k'o hsüeh yüan. Tzu jan k'o hsüeh ming tzu pien ting shih. O La Chung chia hsü chieh p'ou hsüeh ming tz'u. [Russian-Latin-Chinese veterinary anatomy terminology] Peking, K'o hsüeh ch'u pan she, 1957. 216 p.

SF761.C55 Orien China

(Russian-Latin-Chinese)

Compiled under corporate author's earlier name: Chung-kuo k'o hsüeh yüan. Pien i ch'u pan wei yüan hui ming tz'u shih. Though not containing "English" equivalents, this glossary is included in this bibliography since it is useful to English-speaking persons. It contains about 4,000 entries of veterinary anatomy terminology in Russian-Latin-Chinese, arranged according to the Cyrillic alphabet. It was originally compiled by several members of the Agricultural University, and later checked and approved by the Chinese Academy of Sciences, with the purpose of making uniform the terminology in this field as used by workers engaged in production, teaching, research, and translation.

Art and Archaeology

Ch'onggu Taehak, Taegu, Korea. Tosogwan. Han Ying mei shu k'ao ku hsüeh tz'u hui. A glossary of Chinese art and archeology. [1959] 69 double leaves. N33.C5 Orien China

(Chinese-ENGLISH)

A typed and hand-written reproduction copy of the main text of S. Howard Hansford's A Glossary of Chinese Art and Archaeology (see 18). Published in Korea, it omits the Wade-Giles alphabetical index as well as the diagram drawings and index of drawings which appear in the China Society edition.

18

Hansford, S. Howard. A glossary of Chinese art and archaeology. [Han Ying mei shu k'ao ku tz'u hui] [2d ed., rev.] London, China Society, 1961. 104 p. (China Society Sinological series, no. 4) N7340.H3 1961

(Chinese-ENGLISH, with Wade-Giles alphabetical index)

Contains about 1,100 entries arranged under the major subject headings of: metals, gems and gemstones, sculpture in stone, painting, ceramics, and miscellaneous. The entries are given in Chinese characters, and the Wade-Giles romanization, followed by English equivalents and/or definitions and explanations. The Wade-Giles transliterations are listed alphabetically in an index. There are several pages of diagram drawings of ancient ritual bronzes, weapons and decorations, ceramic shapes, and ritual jades, etc. all indexed and cross-referenced by Wade-Giles romanization to the definitions in the text. The latter index was said to be an added feature to the second edition, which was not contained in the out-of-print 1959 first edition.

19

March, Benjamin. Some technical terms of Chinese painting. Baltimore, Waverly Press, 1935. 55 p. (American Council of Learned Societies. Studies in Chinese and related civilizations, no. 2) ND1040.M3

(Chinese-ENGLISH, with Wade-Giles romanization alphabetical index)

"Technical terms" of painting are defined as those which have to do with practice and description rather than criticism. This glossary contains 302 numbered entries of technical terms of Chinese painting consisting of the term in Chinese characters, the Wade-Giles transliteration, the English equivalent, and an English explanatory annotation. Arrangement is by subject category, including: 1) materials; 2) forms of painting; 3) subjects; 4) classification by techniques; 5) brushwork and composition; 6) trees; 7) rocks and mountains; 8) water; 9) clouds; 10) figures; 11) seals and signatures; and 12) mounting. There is an alphabetical list of the terms defined, by Wade-Giles romanization.

Astronautics

Yü chou hang hsing hsüeh tz'u tien pien i tsu. Ying, Han, O, Te, Fa, I, Hsi, Chieh tui chao. Yü chou hang hsing hsüeh tz'u tien. Astronautical multilingual dictionary. [Peking] Kuo fang kung yeh ch'u pan she, 1976. 1027 p.

DLC

(English-Chinese-Russian-German-French-Italian-Spanish-Czech, with indexes in those languages)

Contains 4,811 entries of astronautical terms, and 777 entries relating to cosmic law, listed alphabetically in two separate sections, English-Chinese-Russian-German-French-Italian-Spanish-Czech, with separate indexes in those languages. About 90% of the terms were taken from the dictionary of astronautical terms published in 1965 by the United States National Bureau of Aviation and Astronautics.

Astronomy

Chung-kuo k'o hsüeh yüan. Pien i ch'ü. T'ien wen hsüeh ming tz'u. [Astronomical terminology] Shanghai, Shang wu yin shu kuan, 1952. 61 p. QB14.C54 Orien China

(English-Chinese, with Chinese index)

Contains about 2,200 entries of astronomical terminology, listed alphabetically English-Chinese. There is a Chinese index according to stroke number. The appendix contains English-Chinese lists of the constellations, signs of the zodiac, planets, satellites, meteors, selenographic terms, and fixed stars.

22

Chung-kuo k'o hsüeh yüan. Tzu jan k'o hsüeh ming tz'u pien ting shih. T'ien wen hsüeh ming tz'u. [Astronomical terminology] Peking, K'o hsüeh ch'u pan she, 1956. 61 p.

QB14.C547 Orien China

(English-Chinese, with Chinese index)

Compiled under the author's earlier name: Chung-kuo k'o hsüeh yüan. Pien i ch'u pan wei yüan hui ming tz'u shih. A reprint of the work of the same title published in 1952 under the corporate authorship of Chung-kuo k'o hsüeh yüan. Pien i ch'ü (see 21). As with the earlier edition, contains about 2,200 entries of astronomical terminology, listed alphabetically English-Chinese, with Chinese index according to stroke number. The appendix with various lists of heavenly bodies is also retained.

23

Chung-kuo k'o hsüeh yüan. Tzu jan k'o hsüeh ming tz'u pien ting shih. T'ien wen hsüeh ming tz'u. O Ying Chung tui chao shih yung pen. Russian-English-Chinese astronomical nomenclature. Peking, K'o hsüeh ch'u pan she, 1958. QB14.C55 Orien China 176 p.

(Russian-English-Chinese)

Compiled under the corporate author's earlier name: Chung-kuo k'o hsüeh yüan. Pien i ch'u pan wei yüan hui ming tz'u shih. Contains about 5,000 entries of astronomical nomenclature, listed according to the Cyrillic alphabet, Russian-English-Chinese. Included are terms related to theoretical, spherical, practical, nautical, aeronautical, and radio astronomy as well as astrophysics, astrometry, astrography, celestial mechanics, and cosmogony. The appendix contains a list of the constellations.

Kuo li pien i kuan, Taipei. T'ien wen hsüeh ming tz'u. [Astronomy terminology] Shanghai, Shang wu yin shu kuan [1934] 101 p.

OB14.K86

F204.K96 Orientalia Chinese

(English-German-French-Japanese-Chinese)

Contains 1,324 numbered entries of terms relating to astronomy, listed alphabetically English-German-French-Japanese-Chinese. There is a Chinese index according to stroke number, and a German-French alphabetical index. Appended is a list of the constellations in the various languages mentioned.

Automation

Ying Han tzu tung hsüeh chi chien ts'e i piao tz'u hui. Ying Han zidongxue ji jiance yibiao cihui. [An English-Chinese glossary of automation and detection instruments terminology] [Peking] K'o hsüeh ch'u pan she, 1974. 205 p.

TJ212.5.Y56 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

Compiled by the Automation Institute, Chinese Academy of Sciences, using as a basis Ying O tzu tung hsueh chi chien ts'e i piao tz'u hui (Anglorusskii slovar' po avtomatike i kontrol'no-izmeritel'nym priboram), published in the Soviet Union, as well as other sources. Designed as reference tool for workers engaged in engineering and technology, research, teaching, and translation in the automation field. Contains about 14,000 terms, English-Chinese, including those dealing with automatic control and automatic regulation, follow-up systems, telemechanics and remote control, computers, analog equipment, engineering cybernetics, detection instruments, and semi-conductors used in automation.

Automobiles

Ch'ang-ch'ang. English-Chinese automotive nomenclature, compiled and edited by Calvin C. Chang. [Ying Han ch'i ch'e yung yü tzu hui] Indianapolis, Ind., Marmon-Herrington Company [1943] 236 p.

TL9.C5 G540.4.C36 Orientalia Chinese

(English-Chinese)

Contains about 9,000 entries of automotive nomenclature, listed alphabetically English-Chinese, including terms and names used in connection with motor trucks, cars, tractors, combat tanks, road machinery, army automotive mechanized equipment, manufacturing and servicing equipment and tools, tires and tire equipment, and mechanical and technical terms allied to the automotive industry.

Marmon-Herrington Company, an automotive firm established in 1931, donated the first edition of 10,000 copies for distribution in China and to American colleges, libraries, and other cultural organizations.

(Chinese-English, with English index)

Contains over 3,000 entries arranged by number of strokes and then by radical of the first character of the name entry (whether in the original Chinese or transliterated from another language). The dictionary covers the names of great thinkers both ancient and modern, including those of all countries, with emphasis on those in the fields of the social sciences, philosophy, literature, and the arts.

It is based on biographical materials on pertinent names in the Japanese edition of Encyclopedic Dictionary of Great Thinkers, in Who's Who in the World, and in the Encyclopaedia Britannica. The criteria used in the selection of names were: Those whose theories have been set down in written form; those whose thoughts have been arranged into a definite system or school; those whose actions have influenced society and have caused changes in the atmosphere of human thinking; and those who have distinguished themselves through discoveries and/or inventions in the natural sciences.

An English index gives the equivalent Chinese transliteration as well as page number of the pertinent entry.

Compiled under the corporate author's earlier name: Chung-kuo k'o hsüeh yüan. Pien i ch'u pan wei yüan hui ming tz'u shih. A glossary on the same subject published in 1953 was regarded as inadequate, and this volume was compiled to include other terms relating to forest pathology, plant nematodes, plant viruses, bacteria, fungus, and chemical protection, etc. Consists of two main parts: The first part, Russian-English-Chinese, arranged according to the Cyrillic alphabet and containing about 2,000 entries, many selected from German, English and Russian textbooks on phytopathology. The second part contains a list of about 400 entries of pathogens and plant diseases, in three separate arrangements: Latin-English-Russian-Chinese; Russian-English-Latin-Chinese; and English-Russian-Latin-Chinese.

Since this glossary contains only a Russian-English-Chinese arrangement of the main text, a later version Ying Chung chih wu ping li hsüeh ming tz'u (see 54) published in 1959, presented an English-Chinese arrangement using basically the same entries, but omitting the Russian.

(English-Chinese; Latin-English-Chinese)

Compiled under the corporate author's earlier name: Chung-huo k'o hsüeh yüan. Pien i ch'u pan wei yüan hui ming tz'u shih. An enlarged version of a glossary on the same subject compiled and published in 1953, to which were added important terms relating to forest pathology, plant nematodes, plant viruses, fungus, bacteria, and chemical protection, etc. In two parts: The first part, in English-Chinese with Pinyin romanization of the Chinese characters, containing about 2,100 entries; and the second part, in Latin-English-Chinese, containing about 350 entries of pathogens and plant diseases.

This work contains essentially the same entries as appear in O Ying Chung chih wu ping li hsüeh ming tz'u (see 53), but the arrangement is English-Chinese, rather than Russian-English-Chinese.

Plant Ecology and Geography

Hou, K'uan-chao. Chung-kuo chung tzu chih wu k'o shu tz'u tien. [Dictionary of families and genera of Chinese seed plants] Peking, K'o hsüeh ch'u pan she, 1958. 553 p.

QK9.H7 Orien China

(English-CHINESE)

This dictionary lists 240 families and 2,614 genera of Chinese seed plants representing a total of 23,042 species. These include 10 families of gymnospermae, 203 families of dicotyledonae, and 47 families of monocotyledonae. Arrangement is Latin-Chinese, with explanatory annotations in Chinese. The appendixes include a list of the most important products of Chinese seed plants, a list of abbreviations, a Chinese-Latin list of families and genera of Chinese seed plants according to stroke number, and another list of the latter arranged according to the categories of gymnospermae, dicotyledonae, and monocotyledonae.

Chung-kuo k'o hsüeh yüan. Pien i chü. Pao tzu chih wu hsing t'ai hsüeh ming tz'u. [Spore plant morphology terminology] Shanghai, Shang wu yin shu kuan, 1954. 20 p.

F710.4.C491 Orientalia Chinese

(Chinese-English; English-Chinese)

Contains 637 entries of terminology related to spore plant morphology, including general morphology terms concerning thallophyta, byrophyta, and pteridophyta. A few bacteria morphology terms are also included. Terms used in classification and those terms already listed in the spore plant morphology and plant anatomy glossaries of terms have been omitted. There are two parts: Chinese-English, arranged according to stroke number; and English-Chinese, listed alphabetically.

(Latin-Chinese)

Compiled under the corporate author's earlier name: Chung-kuo k'o hsüeh yüan. Pien i ch'u pan wei yüan hui ming tz'u shih. Contains about 6,000 entries of spore plant nomenclature, listed alphabetically Latin-Chinese. The names are supplementary to those given in an earlier listing also entitled Pao tzu chih wu ming ch'eng (see 66), published in 1955. Included are names of various algae, myxomycetes, eumycetes, lichenes, bryophyta, and pteridophyta.

Buddhism

Eitel, Ernest J. Hand-book of Chinese Buddhism, being a Sanskrit-Chinese dictionary with vocabularies of Buddhist terms in Pali, Singhalese, Siamese, Burmese, Tibetan, Mongolian and Japanese. With a Chinese index by K. Takakuwa. 2d ed., rev. and enl. Tokyo, San-BL1403.E4 1904 shusha, 1904. 324 p.

(Sanskrit-Chinese, with English explanations, and Chinese index)

The second edition was originally completed and published in Hong Kong in 1888, but without the Chinese index. This reprint of the second edition published in Tokyo in 1904 has re-incorporated the Chinese index. The first edition was published in Hong Kong in 1870 and was considered to be the first attempt of its kind to help students understand the meaning of Sanskrit and other foreign terms which continually recurred in the texts of Chinese religious literature, especially Buddhist

The dictionary contains about 2,000 entries; and although strictly speaking it is a Sanskrit-Chinese dictionary, the explanations of the terms are given in English. Thus there is good reason to include the volume in this bibliography. This work as stated above, contains a convenient Chinese index arranged by radical, and also valuable appendixes of vocabularies of Buddhist terms in Pali, Singhalese, Siamese, Burmese, Tibetan, Mongolian and Japanese.

69

Soothill, William E. A dictionary of Chinese Buddhist terms, with Sanskrit and English equivalents and a Sanskrit-Pali index. London, K. Paul, Trench, Trubner, 1937. xix, 510 p.

BL1403.S6

(Chinese-Sanskrit-English)

Compiled in collaboration with Lewis Hodous, the main author Professor Soothill died in 1935, soon after the Dictionary went to press. In contrast with Dr. Eitel's Hand-Book of Chinese Buddhism, this work placed emphasis on its claim to be the first dictionary of Chinese Mahayana terms, and the fact that it dealt with Chinese Buddhist terms in general, which Dr. Eitel's book did not.

There are an estimated 7,500 entries consisting of single characters or combinations of characters arranged by stroke-number and then by radical. Each entry contains Sanskrit and/or English equivalents, and in many cases, additional word combinations which include that entry. There is a "Sanskrit and Pali index" as well as an "Index of terms other than Sanskrit and Pali".

Ch'en, Chien-wu. Tsui hsin hua hsüeh tzu tien. A new complete chemistry dictionary; English, Chinese and Japanese. Hong Kong, K'o hsüeh chih shih yen chiu she, 1963. 378 p.

QD5.C433

(English-Chinese-Japanese)

Consists of five sections and appendixes: The first section contains about 1,200 entries of the chemical elements and inorganic compounds arranged according to category, English-Chinese-Japanese, with the chemical formulas given. The second section contains about 4,000 entries of organic chemicals, listed alphabetically English-Chinese-Japanese, also with their chemical formulas. Section three contains about 600 entries of chemical raw materials and preparations for the pharmaceutical industry, and the other two sections have brief lists of common chemical phrases, and common chemical instruments. There are appended a number of pertinent tables and charts.

QD5.O2

(Russian-English-Chinese)

Contains about 20,000 entries of chemical terms arranged in Russian-English-Chinese format according to the Cyrillic alphabet. Selection of the terms was based on L. I. Callaham's Russian-English Technical and Chemical Dictionary, 1947, together with six other dictionary sources. The appendixes include lists of antibiotics, vitamins, and 808 pharmaceuticals of the Russian National Pharmacopoeia.

QD5.Y5 Orien China F404.Y58 Orientalia Chinese

(English-Chinese)

Contains about 50,000 entries of chemical terminology, listed alphabetically English-Chinese. Also included are scientific terms in physics, mineralogy, geology, and pharmacy related to chemistry. Heilbron's Dictionary of Organic Compounds (3 vols.) was used as a basis of translation, supplemented by inorganic and other technical terms derived from such dictionaries as Hackh's, and Miall's.

75

Ying Han hua hsüeh tz'u tien. Anglo-Chinese chemical dictionary. [Compiled and translated by Hsüeh Te-chiung] Peking, Chung-kuo kung yeh ch'u pan she, 1964. 1222 p.

QD5.Y53

(English-CHINESE)

Originally compiled in 1958, and based on Hackh's Chemical Dictionary, 1944, 3rd edition, this dictionary contained about 57,000 entries of chemical terms, listed alphabetically English-Chinese, with explanatory annotations in Chinese. Also included were terms related to chemistry in the fields of physics, astrophysics, mineralogy, pharmaceutics, agronomy, biology, medicine, and engineering. To these, many new terms have been added which were selected from various chemical dictionaries and text-books published in the 1960's. The book has about 80 illustrations, and many of the entries are provided with chemical formula diagrams.

(CHINESE-English, with English index)

This multi-volume work contains about 17,000 entries of terms used in the fields of chemistry, the chemical industry, and chemical pharmaceuticals. Arrangement is Chinese-English according to stroke number, and explanatory annotations in Chinese are given for most entries.

There are introductory outlines of the three general subject fields of the dictionary. Vol. 8 contains appendixes of 26 chemical charts and tables, and Vol. 9 consists of the English index. The main text of the dictionary is contained in the other volumes; and the entire work contains 6,000 pages and about eight million written words.

QD5.Y49 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

The glossaries include two separate volumes: Vol. 1 relates to organic chemistry and contains about 2,000 entries of terms and expressions in the field of organic chemistry listed alphabetically English-Chinese. Common names of chemical materials are included, but not classification names and trade names. Another volume is to be devoted to biological alkalies. Vol. 2 relates to paints and contains about 800 entries of paint terms listed alphabetically English-Chinese. There is also a brief glossary of about 50 terms related to chromatics terms derived from the subject of paints.

QD5.Y49, v. 2 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

This is the second of two supplements added to the original "English-Chinese dictionary of chemistry and chemical engineering," the second edition of which was published in 1962 (see also 82). It was compiled in 1965 and was revised before being sent to press in 1973. It has over 800 entries of chemical terms pertaining especially to the subject of paints. At the end of the glossary, there is added a list of over 50 entries of chromatics terms relating to paints.

(English-CHINESE, with Chinese-English index) Contains about 8,000 entries of general and practical chemical terms, listed alphabetically English-Chinese, with explanatory annotations in Chinese. Included are definitions, laws, and phrases related to chemistry and chemical engineering, as well as terms dealing with pharmaceuticals, spices, dyes, essential oils, fats, metals, minerals, petroleum products, clay products, pesticides, and tanning materials. There is a Chinese-English index according to stroke number.

(Chinese-English, with English-Chinese appendix, or English index)

The texts of the 1945 and 1947 editions are the same. They contain 173 numbered paragraphs of descriptive data and examples of the principles of naming chemical terms, under the headings of principles for naming of terms, elements, inorganic compounds, and organic compounds. The appendix contains a glossary of about 3,700 entries of chemical compounds, listed alphabetically English-Chinese, with chemical formula given.

The earlier 1933 edition contains only 164 numbered paragraphs on the said principles, also under the same headings as stated above. Instead of an English-Chinese appendix, there is an English alphabetical index.

Kuo li pien i kuan, Taipei. Hua hsüeh ming tz'u. [Chemical terminology] Taipei, Cheng chung shu chü [1960] 401 p. QD5.K85 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

Based on translations into Chinese of the organic and inorganic chemical terms in the Chemical Rubber Publishing Company's Handbook of Chemistry and Physics, this glossary contains about 14,000 entries of chemical terms, listed alphabetically English-Chinese under four separate listings: 1) Inorganic chemical compounds, 2) metalorganic compounds, 3) organic radicals, and 4) organic compounds. Chemical formulas are given for the various entries.

(English-Chinese-Japanese)

Divided into several parts. The first two parts are the main glossary containing about 3,800 entries of names of inorganic compounds and elements, and organic compounds, arranged alphabetically English-Chinese-Japanese, also with chemical formula given for each entry. Other parts consist of lists of names of chemical instruments, and about 400 terms relating to the general study of chemistry. There are also several appendixes of various charts of weights and measures.

Originally published in 1942, the third edition which was issued in 1950 contained about 15,000 entries of chemical terms, including the commercial names of chemical materials as well as their chemical formulas. Also included is terminology of general chemistry, such as that relating to laws and principles, processes, and instruments, etc. For all these the Chinese equivalents are given.

Chinese Sayings

97

Bayne, Parker McEwan. Four character Chinese expressions. Wolfville, Nova Scotia, 1958. 891 p. PL1489.B37

(Chinese-English)

Contains 2,868 numbered entries of four character Chinese expressions, listed according to radical. For each entry, the literal meaning, and the romanized pronunciation in western Mandarin, of each of the four characters are given, followed by the figurative meaning of the expression in idiomatic English. The first compilation originally appeared in ten issues of The West China Missionary News in 1919–20. The author was professor of biology at Acadia University, Wolfville, Nova Scotia.

98

Bueler, William M, and Hou-Pan Chang Chinese sayings. Rutland, Vt., [1972] 143 p.

PL1497.B8

(Chinese-English)

Contains 500 numbered entries of Chinese sayings, or "ch'eng yü" (literary expressions), usually of four characters, arranged in alphabetical order according to the Wade-Giles romanization system, Chinese-English. The 250 sayings considered to be of most frequent use are marked with a "dagger" sign. The English equivalent is given, and a literal translation of the Chinese is given in parentheses below it, for most entries. There is also an English index of key words and concepts.

PL1497.H9

(Chinese-English)

Consists of about 4,700 characters and nearly 30,000 entries of "homely phrases and figures of speech including idioms, metaphors, proverbs, maxims, saws, colloquial phrases, etc. together with their origins from the Chinese Classics", and synonyms and antonyms in general use. Limited to four character Chinese idiomatic phrases, the entries are arranged in alphabetical order according to the Wade-Giles system of romanization. Each phrase is first rendered literally, followed by its equivalent in idiomatic English with the correct meaning. There is an index of the Chinese characters by radical.

Baller, Frederick W. An analytical vocabulary of the New Testament. Shanghai, China Inland Mission and American Presbyterian Mission Press, 1893. 264 p. PL1481.B6B3

(Chinese-English)

Prepared for the use of junior members of the China inland mission, this vocabulary analyzes and explains the derivative origins of 2,304 Chinese characters found in the Peking version of the New Testament. It is noted in the Preface that 1,834 of these, or nearly 80 percent, are found in the Four Gospels alone. There are also for each Chinese character entry generally phrase combinations using the entry character, with English meanings given. The romanization used is the Baller (China inland mission) system. The characters are arranged according to radical.

There is an index according to the Baller romanization. Also appended is an English-Chinese index of names and places, and brief notes on common characters and idioms.

Doolin, Dennis J., and Charles P. Ridley. A Chinese-English dictionary of Communist Chinese terminology. Stanford, Calif., Hoover Institution Press [1973] 569 p. (Hoover Institution publications, 124) DS777.55.D647

(Chinese-English)

This dictionary contains some 17,000 entries, and is concerned primarily with "words and phrases either coined or given new currency" by the Chinese Communists from the early 1920's to the present, with particular attention paid to the post-1949 period and to such movements as the "Great Leap Forward" and the "Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution".

Political terminology is emphasized, but a wide range of related material, especially in regard to Chinese equivalents for foreign names, is included.

The dictionary is arranged according to the traditional 214 radicals, with the characters under each radical listed in order of increasing stroke count. For terms, the second character is arranged by the total number of strokes in that character, as shown by a super-script numeral to the left of the entry. The Wade-Giles romanization is used, but the tones are shown by tonal marks rather than by numbers.

The body of the entry in many cases includes not only a translation or equivalent of the term in question, but an elaboration of the term as well. For example, following the translation of "the Five-Anti" is a list of the Five-Anti themselves. The dictionary uses the full standard Chinese character forms throughout, rather than the simplified characters now prevalently used in Mainland China.

Dennis Doolin, the more well-known of the two authors, has been Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defence for East Asian and Pacific Affairs.

AS36.U57, no. 20,904

(Chinese-English)

This is a conversion into English of the Chinesisch-Deutsches Wörterbuch (Han-Te tz'u-tien; Chinese-German dictionary), prepared by the German Department, Peking Institute of Languages. It contains about 35,000 words and word phrases, which cover most of the everyday vocabulary of the Chinese people and reflect contemporary word usage in the fields of politics, economics, culture, and science, particularly those which have come into common use since the establishment of the People's Republic of China in 1949. "Old and obsolete" expressions have been Arrangement is by character in alphabetical order according to the Pinyin system. While the dictionary uses many of the simplified officially approved as characters of 1959, accompanied by their traditional forms in parentheses, it incorporates only a limited number of simplified "side elements."

The modified radical index, which is notable for its recognition of the problem of indexing simplified characters, modifies and reduces the number of radicals to 186 from the traditional 214. The Han Ying shih shih yung yü tz'u hui (Chinese-English current events dictionary) (Peking, 1964) (see 125), updated this dictionary to some extent, to a time approaching the beginning of the Cultural Revolution.

Kuo chi hui i shu yü hui pien. Han O Te Ying Fa Hsi yü tui chao. [Chinese-Russian-German-English-French-Spanish glossary of international conference terminology] [Compiled by Jean Herbert, with Chinese translation by the English Department, Shanghai Foreign Languages Institute] Peking, Shang wu yin shu kuan, 1963. 12, 284 p. P341.K9

(Chinese-Russian-German-English-French-Spanish)

A glossary of 756 numbered entries taken from Jean Herbert's Conference Terminology, with Chinese translation added (see also 216, Kuo chi hui i shu yü hui pien; Han Ying Fa yü tui chao, which has Wade-Giles and Yale romanizations.)

Arrangement is by subject category. There are six indexes, one for each of the languages represented. The Chinese index is according to alphabetical Pinyin romanization of the Chinese terms.

216

Kuo chi hui i shu yü hui pien. Han Ying Fa yü tui chao. A Chinese glossary of international conference terminology. With Chinese characters, Wade-Giles and Yale romanizations thereof, and English and French equivalents. Romanization prepared by Kathryn A. Haun. Washington, Center for Chinese Research Materials, Association of Research Libraries [1971] xiv, 292 p. P341.K88

(English-French-Chinese, with Chinese, English, and French indexes)

A glossary of 756 numbered terms in English, French, and Chinese, with Wade-Giles and Yale romanizations of the Chinese prepared by the author. The terms are from Conference Terminology, by Jean Herbert, former Chief Interpreter of the United Nations, and the translations into Chinese were rendered by the Shanghai Foreign Languages Institute and published in Kuo chi hui i shu yü hui pien; Han O Te Ying Fa Hsi yü tui chao (see 215). Standard Communist Chinese usage is thus reflected.

Arrangement of the entries is by subject category, covering such topics as: types of meetings; preparation of the meeting; documents; composition of a conference; votes and elections; and debates. There are three indexes: the Chinese, according to the modified alphabetical order found in Mathews' Chinese-English Dictionary; and the English, and French alphabetical indexes.

International Relations

(English-CHINESE, with several Chinese indexes)

Contains about 1,400 entries of international relations terminology, emphasizing terms coming into current use in the past fifty years, listed alphabetically English-Chinese, and with explanatory annotations given in Chinese. There is a cross-reference index from the Chinese characters according to stroke number, to the Chinese characters according to the four corner system; and there is a four-corner system index to the Chinese terms in the entries. Another useful index is of the Chinese terms according to subject category, under such headings as: international organization, international treaties, recognition, warfare, aggression, colonies, diplomacy, armaments, war prisoners, and neutrality. The appendixes include the Chinese version of the United Nations charter, and other important international documents in Chinese.

In format, this is a companion volume to Hsien tai Han Ying tz'u tien (A modern Chinese-English dictionary) (see 439), published by the same firm, also in 1951.

(CHINESE-English, with English and Chinese indexes)

The main volume of the dictionary contains about 3,000 entries with explanatory annotations in Chinese arranged by stroke number, and labelled according to subject field, including literature (poetry, drama, novels), painting, sculpture, architecture, industrial arts, decorations, music, works of art, and names of famous people. Since this volume is western-oriented, most of the entries contain English (French or German, etc.) equivalents, which are also given for names of works of art, literature, and music. These are listed in an alphabetical index. A Chinese index by stroke number also lists all the entries as well as these names of works in Chinese.

The supplemental volume is China-oriented, and contains entries covering the above-mentioned subject fields for China, and not for western countries.

De Francis, John F. Chinese-English glossary of the mathematical sciences. Providence, R. I., American Mathematical Society, 1964. 275 p. QA5.D4

(Chinese-English)

Compiled with a grant from the Joint Committee on Contemporary China of the Social Science Research Council and the American Council of Learned Societies, this glossary contains 16,540 entries of terms in the field of mathematical sciences, arranged in Chinese-English format according to radical. A number of the entries are labelled with abbreviations denoting that the terms were derived from certain special areas such as aeronautical engineering, algebra, analysis, applied mathematics, astronomy, chemistry, foundations of mathematics, geometry, geology, hydraulic engineering, mineralogy, physics, statistics, telecommunications, and topology.

(English-Chinese)

The earlier editions, 1945 and 1946, contain 3,426 numbered entries of terms covering such subdivisions of mathematics, as arithmetic, algebra, algebraic analysis, calculus, theory of functions, geometry, plane and spherical trigonometry, quadric surface, conic section, transcendental curve, analytic geometry, projective geometry, and differential geometry.

The later 1971 edition revises and enlarges the earlier editions and contains about 7,500 entries of terms primarily relating to pure mathematics. Only a small number of terms concerning applied mathematics and statistics have been included.

Sung, Kuo-pin. I hsüeh tz'u yüan. Song Kou-Ping's French-English-Chinese medical etymology. Shanghai, I yao p'ing lun she [1937] 402 p. G104.S73 LC copy imperfect; p. 385-400 wanting.

(French-English-Chinese, with Chinese index)

The author labored 10 years to complete this work, which is more than a dictionary, in that it gives the origin of the medical terms, showing from what countries they were derived: Greek, Latin, Arabian, Anglo-Saxon, French, etc. The entries are arranged according to prefixes and suffixes, with supplemental lists of the same.

In the main lists and supplemental lists, there are about 2,000 prefixes and 3,400 terms derived therefrom; and about 800 suffixes with 1,600 derivatives. The Chinese index to the prefixes and suffixes contains about 1,250 entries.

Werner, Edward T. C. A dictionary of Chinese mythology. Shanghai, Kelly and Walsh, 1932. xxiii, 627 p. BL1801.W35 1932 Reprinted in New York by Julian Press (1961).

(English-Chinese, with English explanations)

The object of this dictionary was to furnish in compact form, "information concerning the entities, animate and inanimate, constituting the Chinese supernal and infernal hierarchies". It is a kind of "Who's Who" of the Chinese otherworld, compiled from Chinese and foreign works related to the subject and from personal observations of the author in Chinese temples, houses, and streets, and from conversations with Chinese scholars, priests and peasants during his forty-eight years' residence in China.

The book has an estimated 3,000 entries, many of which however only serve as cross-references. Transliterations of the Chinese names and terms are given in Wade-Giles, and all the main entries have explanations in English, some quite lengthy, and extending to several pages long. Most of the myths are traceable by the title words of the entries or the cross-reference. For other myths not traceable by these clues, there is an "Index to myths" at the end of the book.

Feng, Chung-tsu. Kuo chi hsin wen tz'u tien. [Dictionary of international news terms] [Compiled by Pin-fu I-hsien] Kuei-lin, Lo ch'ün shutien [1943] 368 p.

A252.F35 Orientalia Chinese

(CHINESE-English)

A wartime publication containing Chinese explanatory annotations of about 400 terms appearing in international news reports, in Chinese-

English format, arranged according to the stroke number of the head character of the Chinese term. In compiling this work, the author used Walter Theimer's Political Dictionary as blueprint, and added terms taken from current newspapers and magazines.

303

Gazetteer of names in the news (in Chinese and English) [n.p., 1945?] 1 v. (various pagings) PL1483.G3

(English-Chinese)

Designed to bring about a certain uniformity in the transliteration of English names into Chinese, this wartime edition, mimeographed on rice paper, consists of several parts: The first part, of about 130 pages, contains about 2,600 entries of names of persons in the news, together with an identifying title, in English and Chinese. The second part, of about 315 pages, contains about 6,300 entries of names of places in the news, together with country of location, in English and Chinese. There are also two supplementary lists of place names in the news: from June to December 1944, and from January to April 1945, in English and Chinese.

304

Mateer, Ada (Haven). Hand book of new terms and newspaper Chinese; (English-Chinese and Chinese-English) Shanghai, Printed at the Presbyterian Mission Press, 1917. 309 p.

PL1489.M28

(English-Chinese; Chinese-English)

While based on the vocabulary of the author's New terms for new ideas (see 305), this work is not exclusively compiled therefrom, nor does it contain all the terms in the other volume. New terms that came into currency were added, and the romanization was changed from the Mateer system to that of Wade, to bring the book in harmony with the more commonly used dictionaries and vocabularies. The dictionary contains two parts: about 4,500 entries, English to Chinese, with Wade romanized pronunciation; and the reverse, Chinese to English, arranged alphabetically by the Wade romanization.

Mateer, Mrs. Ada Haven. New terms for new ideas; a study of the Chinese newspaper. Shanghai, Printed by the Presbyterian Mission Press, 1924. 211 p. PL1489.M3 1924

(Chinese-English, with Chinese and English indexes)

While not strictly a dictionary, this work serves many of the purposes of a dictionary. The format, however, is that of a textbook for the study of the Chinese newspaper. The book contains 45 lessons with lists of vocabulary of government, military affairs, law, international relations, medicine, trade, reform, political parties, societies and clubs, sociology, the individual, religion, education, language, the press, philosophy, and European civilization, and also lists of words in common use. There are entries for about 5,000 terms, with romanization according to the Mateer system, as used in the Mateer Language Series. There is an index according to the Mateer romanized pronunciation, and also an English index.

(English-Chinese)

Contains about 8,000 entries of pathology terms, English-Chinese. An original compilation contained German, Latin, and English terminology; but it was decided to omit the German and combine the Latin and English into one listing. Old terms with historical meaning only, have been omitted, and complex terms have been simplified.

Differs from Ping li hsüeh ming tz'u (Pathology terminology) (see 310), published in Shanghai, 1948, which contained Latin-German-English-

Chinese arrangement.

This glossary was part of the plan to compile terminology of the three branches of medicine, including pathology, therapeutics, and diagnosis. There were to be four volumes concerning pathology, with the last volume containing English and Chinese indexes. This was the first volume, and contains 7,349 entries of names of diseases and terms related to pathology, listed alphabetically Latin-German-English-Chinese, within 11 separate sections, as follows: 1) branches of medical science, 2) names of diseases, 3) cause of disease and infection, 4) diseases caused by living agencies, 5) foreign bodies and chemical diseases, 6) physical and social diseases, 7) endopathy, 8) malformation, 9) maldevelopment, 10) tumors, and 11) progressive dystrophy.

Differs from Ping li hsueh tz'u tien (Pathology terminology) (see 309), published in Peking, 1954, which combines Latin and English terms into one listing with Chinese equivalents.

Pedology (Soils)

PL1483.S6

(Chinese-ENGLISH, with English index)

Contains about 1,000 entries of proper names of miscellaneous places and persons in various Far Eastern countries, listed alphabetically according to romanized pronunciation of the names, with English explanatory annotations given. There is also an English index for the names.

Chinese Names

Holmes, George F., comp. A numerical index of Chinese names. Calcutta, Printed by the Calcutta General Print. Co., 1944. 89 p.

CS2990.H6

(English-Chinese)

This book was designed to enable those with no knowledge of the Chinese language to telephone, telegraph and record on a document, nearly all the Chinese names in current use. It is mainly a selection of Chinese characters occurring in Chinese names, found in the Giles dictionary, and with the numerical representation used by Giles when arranging the characters in their correct order.

A total of about 3,500 characters are listed and arranged alphabetically by Wade-Giles romanization, with Cantonese and Fukienese romanization added.

To use the book, the person whose name is to be recorded is asked to write his name in Chinese, and how it is pronounced in Kuo-yü or the national language. The sounds heard are then looked up in the romanized form, and checked against the signature provided. The system was apparently useful for the Indian military, with whom the author served as Lieutentant Colonel in the 1940's.

U. S. Bureau of immigration and naturalization. List of Chinese family names. Compiled and alphabetically arranged, by Jno. Endicott Gardner. Washington, Government Printing Office, 1909. PL1483.G2 207 p.

(Chinese-English)

Compiled in response to the request of the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization as an aid in its work of identifying Chinese witnesses, this is a listing of about 950 Chinese family names in Chinese characters in the printed and script forms, alphabetically arranged according to the Cantonese dialect (J. Dyer Ball's system of orthography), and accompanied by phonetic representations in the "Sz Yup" (Four districts) and Mandarin or Court "dialects", together with various popular spellings used in the United States. The Mandarin transliteration system used is S. Wells Williams' version. The author, Ino. Endicott Gardner, was U. S. Chinese Inspector and Interpreter in San Francisco, when he made the compilation.

(English-Chinese; Chinese-English)

This is a separate edition containing portions of the book by the same author entitled A Librarian's Handbook for Use in Chinese-Japanese Collections (see 318).

While omitting the part which has to do with the Library of Congress classification scheme, this book does include the two lists (English-Chinese, Chinese-English) of approximately 2,000 Chinese surnames, which are romanized according to Wade-Giles system, and also of the more than 7,000 Japanese surnames. Also appended is the Chinese-Japanese chronological chart with era names.

Ch'en, Ch'eng chih. A librarian's handbook for use in Chinese-Japanese collections. Hanover, N.H., Oriental Society, 1971. 769 p.

CS 2990.C46

(English-Chinese; Chinese-English)

Designed as a reference aid to help American librarians working with Chinese-Japanese collections who have trouble with Chinese and Japanese surnames. Over 2,000 Chinese surnames and over 7,000 Japanese surnames are listed. The Wade-Giles system is used for romanizing the Chinese names.

There are appended those parts of the Library of Congress classification scheme which the author considers most used in the work of Chinese-Japanese collections (notably in the A, B, DS and PL categories). Other tables are added including a Chinese-Japanese chronological chart with era names.

Another issue. Peking [Printed by Hwa hsing press] 1939. [413] p.

CS3000.G5

(Chinese-English; English-Chinese)

This list fills a useful need in providing English transliterations for Japanese surnames which appear frequently in the Chinese vernacular press. As shown in this list, most Japanese surnames have two characters, but some have one, three, or four. Fewer than 100 Chinese characters are used for finals, and more than 1,400 for initials.

Each of the 9,335 entries of the list was numbered in preparation for possible use with telegraphic codes. The Chinese-English section is arranged by stroke number and then by radical. The English-Chinese section is alphabetical. There is a supplement of chronological tables of Japanese and Chinese history.

Sun, Chang. Han Ying tui chao wu li hsüeh ming tz'u hui pien. Chinese English dictionary of physical terms. Wiedsbaden, Otto Harrassowitz, 1969. 404 p. QC5.S95

(Chinese-English)

Contains about 10,000 entries of important physical and non-physical terms that are in common usage in the field of physics, arranged in Chinese–English format alphabetically according to the Pinyin romanization, and with the Pinyin pronunciation given for the Chinese characters. The dictionary basically reverses the English-Chinese Dictionary of Physical Terms (see 346) into a Chinese-English arrangement. Appended are lists of abbreviated names of physics and chemistry, and of chemistry in the Greek alphabet, as well as letters of the Greek alphabet.

345

U.S. Air Force. Foreign Technology Division. Chinese-English nuclear and physics dictionary. [n.p.] 1971. 1152 p. DLC

(Chinese-English)

This is the first of a series of Chinese-English technical dictionaries under preparation by the Foreign Technology Division, United States Air Force Systems Command. The purpose of the series is to provide rapid reference tools for translators, abstractors, and research analysts concerned with scientific and technical materials in Mainland China. The dictionary contains about 28,000 terms selected from sources published in Mainland China. The terms relate not only to general physics, nuclear physics, reactor physics, isotope technology, etc. but also other associated disciplines, such as chemistry, engineering, mechanics, and mineralogy.

The Chinese entries are arranged alphabetically according to the "pinyin" transcription of the first character of each term; with homophones arranged in order by syllable, tones 1 to 4, total stroke count, radical and residual strokes, and with succeeding syllables of each entry in alphabetical order.

The dictionary, printed with the simplified forms of Chinese characters, contains a telecode index of the Chinese characters of each entry (identified by page and line number); and a character index arranged by total stroke number and by radical, referring the reader to the page where terms beginning with such characters are listed.

Other subject areas contemplated in the series include: aviation and space, automation and computer technology, electrical and mechanical engineering, meteorology, telecommunications, electronics, and rocketry.

346

(English-Chinese)

Contains 9,000 entries of physics terms and terms related to physics in the fields of mathematics, meteorology, chemistry, engineering, telegraphy, mineralogy, astronomy, music, biology, electrical engineering, mechanics, and metallurgy, listed alphabetically English-Chinese. Only terms in common usage are selected, and infrequently used terms are not included. A Chinese-English arrangement of this dictionary was compiled by Sun Chang and published in 1969 (see 344).

(CHINESE-English)

Designed as a reference tool for students, this dictionary consists of two parts: The first part contains about 500 entries of terms related to physics, Chinese-English, according to stroke number, with brief explanatory annotations in Chinese. This part has 11 appendixes of various charts and tables related to physics.

The second part contains about 700 entries of terms related to chemistry, in the same format, Chinese-English. There are nine appendixes of chemical charts and tables in this part.

(Chinese-English; English-Chinese)

Out of some 7,000 possible entries collected, only about 1,400 terms were selected by a special committee of top experts in the field, which convened in August 1953. Among the terms weeded out were: those unrelated to and not commonly used in the field of psychology; overly-specialized terms; "obviously reactionary" terminology (such as psychology terminology of the "old society"); and terms related to Pavlov's theories which were "distorted by U.S. reactionary psychologists". Arrangement of the Chinese-English part is according to number of strokes of the first character of the term. The expanded 1958 version (see 355) of this glossary contains about 11,000 entries.

Work began on compilation in 1935, and was completed in 1937, after a process of review and selection by a special committee of psychology experts at home and abroad. The first section of this glossary contains 2,755 numbered entries of general psychology terms, listed alphabetically English-Chinese. The terms were mainly selected from H. C. Warren's Dictionary of Psychology and H. B. English's Dictionary of Psychological Terms, as well as other notable writings on European and American psychology. Generally, terms relating to physiological psychology, abnormal psychology, and instruments used in the study of psychology have been omitted. The Chinese-English section is arranged according to stroke number.

Hill [1965] 56 p. PL1455.M59 Suppl.

(Chinese-English)

This dictionary is designed to help readers and translators of Chinese texts, especially of scientific, political and economic materials published in Mainland China. It contains 212,000 entries, more than 80% of which are common scientific and technical terms used in mathematics, chemistry, medicine, atomic physics, geology, mineralogy, and military affairs. It includes information not readily available in existing dictionaries, such as proper names of Chinese cities, and Chinese personalities, as well as many terms currently used in the People's Republic of China.

The dictionary was compiled from card file accumulations based on the reading of Chinese texts, and also a certain number of the specialized English-Chinese dictionaries published by the Chinese Academy of Sciences. Preparation of the dictionary was for the most part "by semi-automatic mechanical processes" which were used in romanization, sorting, comparison and removal of duplicates, and printing.

Vol. 1 contains various tables which are keyed to the other two volumes. Vol. 2 consists of the main text of the dictionary arranged by Chinese Communist Standard Telegraphic Code in numerical sequence, while Vol. 3 is arranged by Pinyin romanization in alphabetical order and will probably be used the most by readers and translators. Since the arrangement is Chinese to English, the usefulness of the dictionary is greatly enhanced for translators of Chinese texts.

(Chinese-English)

A useful glossary of about 3,200 Chinese terms or phrases, that is, Chinese compounds of two or more words, gleaned from Dr. Sun Yat Sen's San min chu i (The three principles of the prople), with their English translations. Arrangement is according to the page number of the Chinese text as published by the Min chih shu chü, Shanghai, with figures given in the left hand margin of the page. The numbers on the right of the page indicate the page in Frank W. Price's English translation of the said work.

(Chinese-English-German; and English-German-Chinese)

Compiled under corporate author's earlier name: Chung-kuo k'o hsüeh yüan. Pien i ch'u pan wei yüan hui ming tz'u shih. Designed to serve as a reference tool for the teaching and study of surveying and for persons engaged in the actual operations of surveying, this glossary contains about 5,000 entries of terms used in the theory and operations of surveying as well as other related disciplines such as mathematics, physics, and chemistry. The first part is Chinese-English-German, arranged by stroke number; while the second part is English-German-Chinese, listed alphabetically.

Compilation of the glossary was completed in July 1953 by the Surveying and Drawing Bureau of the Military Affairs Commission, and publication took place first in Shanghai in 1954, and later in Peking in 1956, both texts however being identical.

(English-Chinese)

This glossary is a revised and enlarged version of Ts'e liang hsüeh ming tz'u (Surveying terminology) (Chinese-English-German), issued by the same corporate author (see 379), but with a change of title. The earlier edition contained only about 5,000 entries, to which about 6,000 new specialized and general terms in surveying and mapping were added, making a total of about 11,000 entries. The German terms were omitted, and this work is only English-Chinese.

ts'e. Beginner's translation handbook. Shanghai, Commercial Press, 1961. 310, 54 p.

PE1498.F3

(English-Chinese; Chinese-English; with English and Chinese indexes)

Although the title calls this a "handbook", it has a dictionary format and is therefore included in this bibliography. It does not contain concrete nouns, and other parts of speech, but only commonly-used "hsü tzu" (particles), which are difficult to translate because their meanings change depending on the context. There are 656 numbered entries in the English-Chinese section listed alphabetically; and over 1,000 entries in the Chinese-English section arranged by stroke number. English and Chinese indexes are also provided for the user's convenience.

(English-Chinese, with Chinese index)

Designed as a reference tool for persons engaged in the work of production, teaching, scientific research, or compilation and translation in the gas turbine and related fields, this glossary contains about 6,000 entries of English gas turbine terms with Chinese equivalents. The terms include those relating to the principles and structure of gas turbines, function of machine parts, heat engineering principles, and aerodynamics. There is an appendix of abbreviations, English-Chinese; and also a Chinese index arranged by Pinyin pronunciation, with a cross-reference table from stroke number to Pinyin. The glossary was compiled by members of the Gas Turbine Teaching and Research Unit, Tsinghua University.

QL9.C52 Orien China

(Latin-Chinese; Chinese-Latin)

Consists of two parts: The first part, on fish, contains about 5,000 entries of nomenclature for fish, listed alphabetically Latin-Chinese, followed by a Chinese index by stroke number, and a Chinese-Latin arrangement listed alphabetically by Pinyin romanization. The second part, on amphibians and reptiles, contains about 1,000 entries of nomenclature for amphibians and reptiles, with the same three sets of entries.

A companion volume to La Han shou lei ming ch'eng (Latin-Chinese nomenclature for mammals) (see 394), the two works constituted a revised version of the 1955 edition of Chi ch'ui tung wu ming ch'eng (see 393).

Zoohistology

398

Georgetown University, Washington, D.C. Machine Translation Research Center. Dictionary of new simplified Chinese characters, compiled by Anna Chennault. Washington, Machine Translation, Chinese Section, Georgetown University [1962] 88 leaves. PL1175.G4

(Chinese-English)

The first part lists over 550 simplified Chinese characters arranged by stroke count, with complex equivalent, four-digit STC number, Pinyin and Wade-Giles romanization, and meaning or definition in English. The second part lists the standard characters by stroke number, and then gives the simplified equivalents. A third list is arranged according to four-digit STC number, from simplified to standard form; and a fourth list is arranged alphabetically by Pinyin romanization, giving the simplified and complex forms as well as the Wade-Giles romanization. The digital representation is considered to be especially useful to persons experimenting with Chinese machine translation.

399

Hsia, Ronald, and Peter Penn, comps. Dictionary of simplified Chinese. [Chien t'i tzu hui] Kowloon, Distributed by Oriental Book Co. [1969] 122 p. PL1455.H77

(Chinese-English)

Lists the more than 600 "new official simplified characters" in actual circulation in the People's Republic of China as of the date of publication, together with their "old forms", romanized pronunciation, and brief definitions in English. They are first arranged by stroke count, and then alphabetically by the New Latin Transcription (Pinyin).

There are a number of appendixes, including: 116 simplified characters still in trial circulation; 54 simplified "side-elements"; and a radical index.

Jameson, Everett W. A short dictionary of sim-

(Chinese-English)

Most other lists of simplified characters, whether Chinese only, or Chinese-English, are arranged according to stroke number, Pinyin romanization, or the four-corner system. This dictionary's arrangement is by radical, and since such arrangement is relatively new and not yet standardized, the author has assigned certain simplified forms to radicals as seemed most appropriate to himself.

In the revised edition, which is about three times as large as the first, more than 2,000 simplified characters are included. These are listed first in the simplified form with standard equivalents, and then in the standard form with simplified equivalents. The Wade-Giles, and National Phonetic transliterations are given and the English meaning. The appendixes include: a table of simplified characters with obscure radicals, and a list of the simplified radicals.

Chinese-English Dictionaries

401

Baller, Frederick W. An analytical Chinese-English dictionary. Shanghai, China Inland Mission and American Presbyterian Mission Press, 1900. 637 p. PL1455.B2

(Chinese-English, with Chinese radical index)

This dictionary is the predecessor of Mathews' Chinese-English Dictionary, which was also compiled for the China Inland Mission, and contains some similar features, such as the radical index, and "list of characters having obscure radicals". Baller included 6,089 single characters and 40,000 illustrations; Mathews increased the number of single characters to 7,785 and gave over 104,000 illustrations.

Mathews, however, is not a revision of Baller, but a "new" dictionary. The romanization used in Baller's work is now referred to as Baller's system or the China Inland Mission (C.I.M.) system. The differences of spelling as compared to Giles and Williams are shown in a table insert. Mathews uses Wade-Giles.

Baller's dictionary is arranged alphabetically according to groups of characters having the same romanized pronunciation by the Baller system, and the characters are numbered consecutively, there being a Chinese radical index at the back of the book referring to these numbers.

In the appendix of the dictionary, there is also included a list of selected passages from the Four Books and Standard Commentary of Chu-hsi, arranged according to radical of the first character of the passage, which are numbered to refer to the same character in the body of the dictionary.

Chao, Yuen Ren, and Lien-sheng Yang. Concise dictionary of spoken Chinese. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1961. xxxix, 292 p. PL1455.C574 1961

(Chinese-English, with National Romanization index)

This "concise" dictionary, compiled by two famous Chinese scholars, has many elaborate features to help the user study the refinements of spoken Chinese. Thus indications are provided showing grammatical function and stylistic class of each entry and whether the entries are particles and interjections, derivative words, or contextual words.

The National system of romanization (Gwoyeu Romatzyh, W. Simon, 1942) is used, as well as the Wade-Giles, and a concordance of the two systems appears in the appendix.

The approximately 5,000 entries are arranged and numbered according to the 214 radicals, and there is a National Romanization index of the characters referring to the radical numbers.

The dictionary was "an outgrowth of the wartime courses in Chinese given at Harvard University."

403

Ch'i ming Han Ying tz'u tien. Chi-ming Chinese-English dictionary. [Taipei] Ch'i ming shu chü [1960] 751 p. PL1455.C593 Orien China

(Chinese-English)

This pocket-size volume was designed to update such dictionaries as Mathews' by adding more current terms and by making revisions so that the contents would be more useful especially for Chinese persons. Its general format reminds one of Mathews', and its entries are provided with Wade-Giles romanization, but arrangement is according to radical. There are 8,000 individual characters. and 45,000 word combinations, many of which are labelled according to subject category. An appendix contains a listing in English and Chinese of the public and private organizations in Taiwan.

404

China Inland Mission. An analytical vocabulary of the Mandarin dialect for the use of beginners. Prepared for the use of junior members of the China Inland Mission. Shanghai, 1887. 142 PL1455.C595

(Chinese-English, with Romanization index)

Contains, with the radicals, 1,170 characters, being those found in the Mandarin version of John's Gospel. Arrangement is according to radical. For each entry, the romanized pronunciation is given using the China Inland Mission system, which represents the Southern Standard Mandarin. Examples of use are given with English equivalents, and each character is analyzed into components to show its derivation, or similar characters are given to help the student through the law of association. A syllabic romanization index is provided at the end of the book.

405

Ch'ü, Chung-fu. T. F. Chu's Chinese-English dictionary. Shanghai, Little Book Co. [1932] 109, 42 p. (Little book special) PL1455.C63

(Chinese-English)

This little book claims to have been "by far the littlest Chinese-English Dictionary that ever appeared". It contains about 4,000 Chinese characters with simple English equivalents. The novelty of the work is that it presents a newly invented "Chu Catalog of Words," which is another system of character arrangement by which each character is given a four-digit number according to the forms of strokes. For divisible characters, the first and last stroke of each component are given numbers; for integrated characters, only the first and last strokes are given numbers and two zero's are inserted inbetween, as 5008. The system does not appear to have gained any currency.

There is added an index of characters by stroke number.

[Rev. ed. Taipei] T'ai-wan Chung Hwa Book Co., 1967. 22, 903, 23 p.

PL1455.C64 1967

(Chinese-English)

This dictionary's format is very similar to that of A Complete Chinese-English Dictionary, by O. Z. Tsang (see 434). However, it omits many of the word combinations which appear in the other, while at the same time, some new terms and expressions are added. The 1931 edition contains about 4,000 single characters, for which the Wade-Giles romanization is given as well as the phonetic alphabet (Chu yin tzu mu) symbols. The characters are arranged according to radical, but there is a romanization as well as a stroke number index. A brief supplement of new terms is appended.

The 1967 edition enlarges upon and updates the earlier version. The same format is retained, but the phonetic alphabet symbols are omitted. The later volume contains about 10,000 single characters, and about 100,000 word combinations.

(Chinese-English)

A handy pocket volume, with a wealth of information for its size, and not strictly a dictionary, most of the material being arranged by subject category. It contains five parts: 1) common vocabulary; 2) general conversation; 3) commercial conversations; 4) "the letter writer"; and 5) miscellaneous, including proverbs. The general format is bilingual, from Chinese to English.

As a pocket-dictionary, it contains 5,000 single characters and about 13,000 word combinations, listed according to a modified Wade-Giles romanization, Chinese-English, in column format, giving not only the English meanings, but the radical and its number, and the Phonetic, with its number in W. E. Soothill's Student's Four Thousand . . . Dictionary (see 432). There is a Chinese radical index; and various tables and charts are included under the heading of "General Information".

Gilbert, Friedrich R. A pocket-dictionary of Chinese characters on mnemonic principles. Tokyo, Japan, Sold at Maruzen Co., printed by Taiheiyosha [1936?] 42, 308, 47 p.

PL1455.G54

(Chinese-English)

This work represents the English translation of the original German edition, published in Tokyo in 1934. However, about 1,500 rarely used characters were omitted, and this book contains only about 4,500 characters, against 6,000 of the German edition. An alphabetical list of the principal English words and terms, together with their characters, has been added.

The entries are arranged according to radical and contain the Chinese character, with Japanese katakana and Romaji pronunciations; notations referring to whether the entry is a radical (R) or new-radical (NR), or the number of components it has; frequency-notations such as "f" for frequent, "m" for medium frequency, "r" for rare, etc.; and the mnemonics, which give separate meanings for each component, plus the actual full meaning of the character. Of the 4,500 characters, 4,100 are composites and can be memorized through equations. For example: the character "hsin" can be memorized through the equation: man word = truth.

gon Book Reprint Corp., 1964. 2 v. in 1 PL1455.G62 1964

(Chinese-English)

This dictionary is the authorative source for the Wade-Giles system of romanization, which is based on Sir Thomas Wade's transliteration system in his reader Yü yen tzu erh chi (London, 1867), a progressive course designed to assist the student of colloquial Chinese. Prof. Giles modified the system in this dictionary, and it is presently known as the Wade-Giles system.

A monumental work, the dictionary contains 13,848 numbered entries of Chinese characters, arranged alphabetically according to their romanized pronunciation, with copious examples of use in colloquial and classical expressions. Pronunciation is also given for the characters in various other dialects. There is a radical index, and the appendixes include tables of insignia of official rank, the family names, the Chinese dynasties, topographical names, the calendar, and the Chinese digits and decimal system.

(Chinese-English)

Originally published in 1891, this dictionary by 1933 had 15,000 copies in print. The 1965 issue contains a supplement of the new abbreviated characters in official use on Mainland China. The usefulness of this dictionary apparently lies in its pocket size, yet containing over 10,000 individual characters, arranged according to the Wade-Giles romanization, with tones given, and brief English equivalents. All the characters are then indexed according to radical.

(Chinese-English, with English-Chinese index)
This dictionary contains 9,414 entries arranged according to Wang Yün-wu's four-corner system, a key to which is given in the introduction. Each entry contains the Chinese character, the four-corner system number, its number as listed in Mathews' dictionary, brief Chinese and English definitions, and several transliterations, including the Yale, Wade-Giles, National Phonetic, and Taiwanese.

There is an English-Chinese index, and an index to the characters in the text arranged alphabetically according to their National Phonetic transliterated pronunciations.

(Chinese-English)

This work, in the form of a Chinese-English dictionary, presents another system of arrangement of Chinese characters, to replace the radical or stroke number system. The principles used are "phonetic word grouping" and "word-group finding", by which 8,000 common Chinese words are arranged in 976 sub-groups headed by 941 head words called basic words (b-words). The word groups are arranged in Wade-Giles romanized spelling alphabetical order of their b-words. The words in each group also have the Chinese Phonetic Alphabet ("chu yin tzu mu") symbols as well as English meanings. In Chinese, the new system is called "Chung wen chi yin tzu chien fa tien". It is yet too early to evaluate its practicality or predict its future usefulness.

Hong Kong, Yüan yeh ch'u pan she, 1957. 832, 73 p. PL1455.L57 Orien China

(Chinese-English)

This dictionary, published under a new author and title, contains the same identical main text in reduced format of the work compiled by Li Yüwen (see 416), which was first published in 1918, although it estimates the number of phrase entries as 70,000, rather than 50,000 in the earlier volume. Besides the index by stroke number, and the Wade-Giles index, this dictionary adds an index according to the four-corner system.

(Chinese-English)

Compiled by Li Yü-wen (Lee Yu-wen) of Peiyang University, and edited by two well-known Anglo-Chinese scholars, Dr. V. K. Lee and Mr. Woo Kwang-kien, the dictionary contains about 10,000 characters and more than 50,000 phrases. The single characters, arranged according to radical, are romanized according to the Wade-Giles system. Included among the entries are: technical terms, slang, proverbs, maxims, and idiomatic and familiar phrases, as well as proper names and names of places.

There is an index by stroke number, and an index arranged by the Wade-Giles romanization system. The dictionary was first published in 1918. In 1957, the same main text was published under a different title with Li Wei-nung as compiler (see 415).

(Chinese-English)

Contains about 6,000 terms and phrases arranged according to 15 major subject headings and about 105 sub-headings. Yale romanization is given for the Chinese characters; and for the English equivalents, English pronunciation helps are given for many entries. There is appended a list of 707 "example dialogues" from the author's Speak Chinese the Marco Liang Way.

(Chinese-English)

Contains 7,331 Chinese characters combined into some 80,000 entries, selected from such source materials as dictionaries, old and modern literature, current newspapers, periodicals, legal documents, and daily conversations, on the basis of "wide application" and "current usage." Intended for readers seeking general information. Contains many up-to-date terms such as "tiennao" (computer, literally "electronic brain") "leishe" (laser), etc. Chinese Nationalist-oriented, the work omits many terms commonly used in the People's Republic of China, although a few are included such as: "Ta-yao-chin"—(in Communist terminology) the Great Leap Forward; and "Hungwei-ping"—the Red Guards (created by Mao Tsetung as a weapon to fight his political opponents). Arrangement is by radical. Renditions of individual characters are given in the "chu yin tzu mu" (Mandarin phonetic symbols), Wade-Giles system, and Kwoyeu Romatzyh, but romanization of the combinations is given only in Mandarin phonetic symbols. Several indexes are included, making this dictionary one of the most easy to use for all students of Chinese. These approaches include a radical index, a stroke-number index, a Mandarin phonetic symbol index, and a Wade-Giles romanization index.

(Chinese-English, with English-Chinese index)

Emphasis is placed on presenting the "idiomatic equivalence" of words and phrases rather than rendering straight or literal translations. Contains 8,100 individual characters and approximately 110,000 entries, including new terms and expressions from the arts, classics, sciences, and politics, to meet the demands of social and technological change. Arrangement is according to a numerical index of characters newly devised by Dr. Lin and based on his own Instant Index System, which breaks down all characters into 33 basic stroke formations, and is termed "The Chinese Alphabet." Other distinctive features of the dictionary are: It is the first to assign parts of speech to Chinese words; it contains a romanized index arranged according to a system developed by Dr. Lin, which incorporates the tones into the transliterated sounds, and which resembles the Gwoyeu Romatzyh (national language romanization) system adopted by the Chinese Government in 1928. The dictionary includes also an English index of over 60,000 entries. This serves as an English-Chinese dictionary, including such modern jargon and slang as: hippie, rock and roll, and hot dog.

The dictionary contains only a few Chinese Communist words and phrases, such as "hsiafang" (reassign from urban to rural areas) and "Ta-yao-chin" (Great Leap Forward), which are said to constitute only about I% of the total number of entries. The work includes also a list of over 2,000 simplified characters which have come into common use in the People's Republic of China.

Actually a Cantonese-English dictionary, this early work had for its purpose to help students in the study of Chinese and Christian literature. It contains about 9,000 characters arranged by radical, with romanized pronunciation into Cantonese, English explanation with synonyms, and illustrative phrases and sentences, particularly rich in Cantonese colloquialisms. The author also published an English and Chinese dictionary in 1866 (no copy in LC), on which was based the Commercial Press English and Chinese Pronouncing Dictionary (see 477).

for the China Inland Mission. Rev. English index. Published for the Harvard-Yenching Institute. Cambridge, Mass., Harvard University Press, 1944. 186 p. PL1455.M34 1943 Index

(Chinese-English)

First published in Shanghai by the China Inland Mission and Presbyterian Mission Press in 1931, this dictionary was reprinted as the revised American edition for the Harvard-Yenching Institute in 1943. Contains 7,785 head characters and over 104,000 combinations or illustrations drawn from the classics, general literature, magazines, newspapers, advertisements, legal documents, and other sources available at the time of compilation. Arranged alphabetically according to the Wade-Giles system of romanization, with index by radical and stroke count. A considerable number of the entries are now outdated, and some perhaps are even obsolete. Some of the expressions included have changed meanings today, and many new terms now in current use do not appear in this dictionary, especially terminology related modern technology and of course, words and phrases which have gained wide usage in the People's Republic of China.

In spite of the appearance of a number of new general Chinese-English dictionaries, this work will doubtless continue to be one of the most widely used by students of Chinese history, literature, thought, and civilization. A revised English index was published by the Harvard University Press in 1944.

Morrison, Robert. A dictionary of the Chinese language, in three parts. Macao, Printed at the Honorable East India Company's Press, by P. P. Thoms, 1815–23. 6 v. PL1455.M67

(Chinese-English; English-Chinese)

This voluminous work was printed at the expense of the East India Company, and contains three parts in six volumes. The first is the Tzutien, which is Chinese-English, arranged according to radical, and published in three volumes: v. 1 in 1815 (xviii, 930 p.), v. 2 in 1822 (884 p.), and v. 3 in 1823 (908 p.).

The second part is based on the Wu chü yün fu (a dictionary divided among 128 newly selected finals, the sounds under each final being arranged by 36 initials), and is Chinese-English arranged alphabetically according to a romanization into the Nanking dialect, rather than the Peking. Vol. 1 (1090 p.) appeared in 1819, and v. 2 (178, 305 p.), containing various indexes and tables, and a synopsis of ancient forms of characters, etc. was published in 1820. This part was reprinted as a separate work under the same title in Shanghai in 1865 (see 423 and 424).

The third part (480 p.) is English-Chinese and appeared in 1822.

Poletti, P. A Chinese and English dictionary, arranged according to radicals and sub-radicals. New and enl. ed., containing 12,650 Chinese characters with the pronunciation in the Peking dialect according to Sir Thomas Wade's system, and the pronunciation in the general language of China in Dr. Williams' spelling. Shanghai, Printed at the American Presbyterian Mission Press, 1896. cvi, 307 p. PL1455.P7

(Chinese-English)

This dictionary contains another interesting system of arrangement of Chinese characters, which however has not gained much currency. It first arranges the characters by the radicals in the usually accepted way; but then, instead of counting the number of the remaining strokes, it again arranges the characters by "sub-radicals," that is, by the radical under which the remaining part of the character would be found.

Each of the 12,650 characters listed has given with it Wade's romanization as well as Williams' transliteration (Southern Mandarin). The English meanings were taken from existing dictionaries of the time.

(Chinese-English)

This pocket-size dictionary contains about 2,500 common Chinese words and terms with simple English equivalents, arranged alphabetically according to the Wade-Giles romanization of the Chinese entries. The words are mainly colloquial and non-technical.

A companion edition is Han yü p'in yin tzu tien (see 461), which is according to the Pinyin romanization.

(Chinese-English)

This is a handy pocket-size dictionary containing about 5,000 head characters and about 40,000 word combinations, arranged according to radical. Wade-Giles pronunciation of the head characters is given; and the English equivalents or explanations are usually brief and simple. About 2,000 new terms current to the period were added in revising the earlier edition originally published in 1931.

PL1455.S5

(Chinese-English, with Chinese radical index)

Designed for beginners by this famous Chinese linguist, who was Reader in Chinese in the University of London, this is the first such dictionary to adopt the G. R. (Gwoyeu Romatzyh), the "Official Chinese Latin Script," as its system of transcription. It is based on the B. D. (Biaujoenyeu Dahtzyrdean), published in Shanghai in 1936, and contains about 14,000 compounds, arranged alphabetically according to the G. R. romanization.

There is an index by Chinese radical, and an elaborate series of appendixes, which include: the most important classifiers, weights and measures, rules and concordances of the G. R. romanization, chronological tables, and geographical tables.

432

(Chinese-English)

Designed for the student to know what vocabulary is of chief value and most useful, this pocket dictionary, first published in 1899, and in its third edition in 1903, consists of two main parts. Part I contains over 4,000 commonly used Chinese characters (arranged according to phonetics and divided into 13 Sections), with Wade-Giles romanization and English meaning, plus selected Chinese word combinations. These entries were meant for study. Part II, on the other hand, containing about 6,000 Chinese characters not commonly used, was meant to be for reference. These entries are arranged alphabetically according to Wade-Giles romanization, and the "New Standard Romanization", which was apparently gaining some acceptance in the early 1900's, is given in brackets. Simple English translations are given for these entries.

The dictionary contains a number of brief appendixes, and a radical index. The author was also compiler, with Professor L. Hodous, of A Dictionary of Chinese Buddhist Terms (see 69).

PL2006.S7 1898a

(Chinese-English)

The author, a member of the Imperial Maritime Customs, first published this work in 1871. On it was based A Dictionary From English to Colloquial Mandarin Chinese, published in 1905 (see 504). The second edition contained 719 pages, and the third edition 788 pages (with 5,000 more phrases than found in previous vocabularies, or a total of about 30,000 initial characters and phrases).

Arrangement is alphabetical according to Wade-Giles transliteration of some 4,500 Chinese characters, 95% of which are followed by a group of characters to constitute a phrase either in "Kuanhua" or "Wen-li". The first character of a group is followed by two figures, referring to page numbers in Giles' and Williams' dictionaries. Each entry contains the romanized form, the Chinese characters, and the English equivalent or meaning. There is an index of the characters according to radical and stroke number.

The dictionary was revised and enlarged by the Rev. Donald MacGillivray, and subsequent editions were published under his name (see 421).

Originally compiled in 1920 by O. Z. Tsang (Chang P'eng-yün), a former teacher of translation of St. John's University, Shanghai, this dictionary contains about 6,000 head characters and about 50,000 word combinations. Arrangement is according to radical. The head character entries contain the Wade-Giles romanization, but without tone indications, and there is a Chinese index arranged according to romanization. The word combinations include scientific terms, labelled according to subject field, as well as idioms, proverbs, and literary expressions, etc. In the English gloss, there are often many English synonyms given.

PL1455.W15 1971

(Chinese-English; English-Chinese)

This dictionary, which was developed pursuant to a contract between the U. S. Office of Education and Seton Hall University, was designed for students of elementary Chinese in both colleges and high schools; and it was noted in the Foreword that as of the date of publication, 120 colleges and universities and 135 high schools in the United States were teaching Chinese to more than 2,500 students.

The Chinese-English section is the first part of a two-way dictionary, the English-Chinese section having been published in 1971. It contains about 6,000 entries, selected and analyzed, and arranged by Pinyin romanization. There are comparative transcription tables of the Pinyin, Yale, and Wade-Giles systems, and a Chinese index by radicals.

The English-Chinese section contains about 4,000 entries, listed alphabetically English-Chinese, with illustrative sentences, and Pinyin romanization given for Chinese renderings.

The original edition of the dictionary, published in 1874, consisted of 12,527 characters, "contained in 10,940 articles, and placed under 522 syllables, which follow each other alphabetically." The Wu Fang Yuen Yin (by Fan T'eng-feng, published in 1710, with sounds classified under 12 categories of finals), was used as a basis of arrangement.

The revised edition in 1909 contains all the material of the original, but the romanization was changed to conform to that of Sir Thomas F. Wade. There is, however, an index of the characters arranged according to radical.

Dictionary of spoken Chinese. New Haven,
Yale University Press, 1966. xxxix, 1071 p.

PL1455.Y295

(Chinese-English; English-Chinese)

A revision of War Department Technical manual TM 30-933, Dictionary of Spoken Chinese, published in 1945, this work was designed for students of colloquial Mandarin on the intermediate level. It provides lexical materials for conversations on all levels, and also contains some scientific terms, localisms, and other special terminology. Yale romanization is used throughout, and there is a character index by radical cross-referenced to the Yale. Also, there is appended a comparative table for conversion of the Yale to other major systems of romanization.

The dictionary contains two sections: Chinese-English, arranged by Yale romanization; and English-Chinese, arranged alphabetically by key word. For the Chinese character or English key word entries, there are given conversational sentences as examples of use, with their translations.

(English-Chinese; Chinese-English)

A revised edition of Vocabulary for Airmen, issued by the Institute in 1952, this work contains, according to the foreword, about 9,000 words. It consists of two main parts: The first part is English to Chinese, the entries consisting of the English word, abbreviation for parts of speech, the Chinese equivalent given in "boundform" of the Yale romanization system, and then abbreviation for sources, indicating the text vocabulary where the item was introduced. The second part is Chinese to English, listed alphabetically according to Yale romanized pronunciation of the head words and their "boundforms", by which the separate syllables are combined. The Chinese characters are also given in the second part.

There is an appendix listing the so-called "measure" words (also known as "classifiers" or "numerical adjuncts") for both Chinese and English; and also one which lists common English idiomatic expressions with Chinese equivalents.

PL1706.D4 1899 Suppl.

(Chinese-English)

Contains roughly about 9,000 single Chinese character sounds and about 50,000 word combinations, listed alphabetically according to the sounds, with English translations and explanations. No Chinese characters are given, and, according to the author, about one-fourth to one-third of the sounds, being colloquial, do not have accepted Chinese characters. The supplement, compiled about 25 years later, by Thomas Barclay, has about 4,000 single Chinese character sounds, with Chinese characters given, and about 20,000 word combinations. The Amoy vernacular was said to be spoken by about 8-10 million people. The dictionary contains the principal variations with the subordinate dialects of Chang-chew and Chin-chew, the Chang-chew sounds being close to those given in Dr. Medhurst's Dictionary of the Hok-keen Dialect (see 453).

Cowles, Roy T. The Cantonese speaker's dictionary. [Hong Kong] Hong Kong University Press, 1965. xvii, 1318, iv, 232 p.

PL1736.C6 1965

(Chinese-English)

Contains over 133,000 entries of modern up-to-date words and expressions, arranged in Chinese-English format alphabetically according to standard Cantonese romanization, without the Chinese characters being given in the entries. There is included, as Part II of the dictionary, a "Character Code Book", consisting of a romanization key to characters, and a character key to romanization. The volume was designed for use by foreign students, and especially by missionary students.

Cowles, Roy T. A pocket dictionary of Cantonese. 2d ed. rev. and enl. Hong Kong, South China Peniel Press, 1949. 1 v. (various pagings) PL1455.C68

(Chinese-English, with English-Chinese index) Contains 5,282 numbered characters, and about 4,000 phrases, selected because they are in colloquial use, from the colloquial Bible, colloquial literature, and everyday conversational language. Arrangement is by a system of Cantonese romanization adopted by the Missionary body of South China in 1888. There is a radical index, and an English index. Also, a list of 200 common geographical names, and a brief list of Bible names with transliterations into the Cantonese.

Eitel, Ernest J. A Chinese-English dictionary in the Cantonese dialect. Revised and enlarged by Immanuel G. Genahr. Hongking, Kelly & PL1736.E4 1910 Walsh, 1910–11. 2 v.

(Chinese-English)

Based on the Imperial Dictionary of Kanghi, Dr. Legge's Chinese Classics, and Dr. S. Wells Williams' Tonic Dictionary (see 451), this dictionary was first published in 1877 by Dr. Ernest J. Eitel, and later revised and enlarged by Immanuel G. Genahr. It contains about 10,000 entries of single Chinese characters listed under approximately 700 syllabic divisions arranged alphabetically according to a modified Williams' Cantonese romanization, with English equivalents. There are over 40,000 examples of use in phrases belonging to book-language, or in colloquial or classical expressions, with the Cantonese pronunciation given and also the English meaning. There is a Chinese character index to the romanization arranged according to radical, and a detailed explanation of the system of romanization.

Huang, Po-fei. Cantonese dictionary; Cantonese-English, English-Cantonese, by Parker Po-fei Huang. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1970. xxi, 489 p. (Yale linguistic series)

PL1736.H8

(English-Chinese; Chinese-English)

This dictionary, using the Yale system of romanizing Cantonese, contains in its main text two sections: An English-Cantonese section of 20,000 entries, with phrases or sentences to illustrate accepted usage; and a Cantonese-English section, arranged alphabetically according to the Yale romanized pronunciation, with Chinese characters given, the part of speech, and the English equivalent with illustrative sentences when necessary. There is also a Chinese character index arranged by number of strokes.

Appended are also a list of geographical names and common Chinese surnames; and a comparative table of the Yale, Meyer-Wempe, and IPA (International Phonetic Alphabet) systems of romanization of Cantonese.

The author is also compiler of IFEL Vocabulary of Spoken Chinese (see 442), which uses the Yale system of romanizing Mandarin.

(Chinese-English, with Chinese radical index)

Contains 3,961 numbered entries of Chinese characters alphabetically arranged in Chinese-English format, according to their romanized pronunciation in the Cantonese dialect. Word combinations are given for each of the entries and include colloquial expressions and literary terms, with emphasis on the former. The book contains about 20,000 such terms and phrases. A numerical figure is given below each character denoting the number of the radical and the number of residual strokes. There is a Chinese index arranged according to radical cross referenced to the Cantonese romanization of the character and its numbered entry. The romanization employed is probably the one in most common use today.

Williams, Samuel Wells. Ying wa fan wan ts'ut iu. A tonic dictionary of the Chinese language in the Canton dialect. Canton, Printed at the Office of the Chinese Repository, 1856. xxxvi, 571 p. PL1736.W5

(Chinese-English)

Contains about 7,850 Chinese characters listed under 700 syllabic divisions arranged alphabetically according to a "tonic" romanization system of the Cantonese dialect, with word combinations given in the romanized Cantonese together with their English equivalents. There is a Chinese character index to the Cantonese romanization arranged according to radical. A detailed explanation of the "tonic" romanization appears in the Introduction.

Foochow-English

Maclay, Robert S., and C. C. Baldwin. An alphabetic dictionary of the Chinese language in the Foochow dialect. Rev. ed. Foochow, Methodist Episcoplal Mission Press, 1898. xx, 754 p.

PL1826.M3

(Chinese-English)

Contains 9,390 leading Chinese characters listed under 928 syllabic divisions arranged alphabetically according to the Foochow dialect romanization system devised by Sir William Jones, including more than 20,000 word combinations in Chinese, with their English equivalents. There is a Chinese character index to the romanization arranged according to radical. The Foochow dialect was said to be spoken by probably five millions of people.

Hok-keen-English

Medhurst, Walter H. A dictionary of the Hokkeen dialect of the Chinese language, according to the reading and colloquial idioms: containing about 12,000 characters. Macao, Printed at the Honorable East India Company's Press, by G. J. Steyn and Brother, 1832. [v]—lxiv, 860 p. PL1706.M4

(Chinese-English, with Chinese index according to radical)

This dictionary of the Hok-keen (Fukien) dialect contains about 12,000 characters, arranged by romanized pronunciation in that dialect according to the author's own system. For each character, the sound and tone are given, and the English equivalent. Many entries also contain examples of use, usually in classical style, and generally taken from approved Chinese authors, with English translations given. There is a Chinese index according to radical, and the work is prefaced by a short historical and statistical account of Hok-keen; a treatise on the orthography of the Hok-keen dialect, the necessary indexes, etc. The Amoy dialect is said to partially coincide with Dr. Medhurst's Hok-keen dialect, particularly the subordinate dialect of Chang-chew (Chang-chou).

454

Davis, S. H., and J. A. Silsby. Shanghai vernacular; Chinese-English dictionary. Shanghai, Printed at the American Presbyterian Mission Press, 1900. xx, 188 p. PL2066.D3

(Chinese-English)

Contains 7,779 numbered entries of Chinese characters arranged according to radical, with English equivalent and pronunciation in the Shanghai vernacular according to the "Shanghai union system of romanization." Also given for each entry is the page number from Williams' dictionary and the character number from the Giles' dictionary.

Dictionary Indexes

455

Acheson, James. An index to Dr. Williams' "Syllabic dictionary of the Chinese language." Arranged according to Sir Thomas Wade's system of orthography. Hongkong, Kelly & Walsh, 1879. 124 p. PL1455.W67

(Wade Romanization-Chinese)

This index was designed to remedy the defect of the original Williams' Syllabic Dictionary, published in 1874, in which the pronunciation of the Chinese characters was a "general average" of a number of dialects of Southern Mandarin. Thus those who knew only the Wade system of romanization were unable to use it. When the revised edition appeared in 1909 in which the romanization was changed to the Wade system, the index of course lost its usefulness.

456

Dougherty, Ching-yi, Sydney M. Lamb, and Samuel E. Martin. Chinese character indexes. Berkeley, University of California Press, 1963. 5 v. PL1171.D6

(English-Chinese)

While not strictly a "dictionary," these Indexes are included in this bibliography, since they constitute basic and essential parts of other dictionaries. This set of indexes represents the first effort of the Chinese section of the University of California Machine Translation Project, established in October 1960 under a grant from the National Science Foundation, to adapt Chinese characters to the mechanical operation of the computer.

It took a year and a half to assemble the necessary information, but with the aid of the IBM 1401 computer, it took only a few days to arrange and rearrange the information and print out the five volumes of Indexes, as follows: v. 1: Telegraphic code index; v. 2: Romanization index; v. 3: Radical index; v. 4: Total stroke count index; and v. 5:

Four corner system index.

Volume one also contains various rules for conversion from one romanization system to another; and a concordance of five systems: "National"; "Communist"; Oshanin; Wade; and Yale.

457

Nash, Vernon, comp. Trindex; an index to three dictionaries: Giles' Chinese-English dictionary, K'ang Hsi tzu tien, P'ei wen yun fu. Peiping, China, Printed by Index Press, Yenching University [1936] lxx, 584 p. PL1455.G622

(Chinese-English)

This work is included here not because it is a dictionary, but because it is an index to other dictionaries, namely, Giles' Chinese-English dictionary, K'ang Hsi tzu tien, and P'ei wen yün fu. It lists the 13,848 characters of the Giles' dictionary according to the so-called "Chung Kuo Tzu Kuei Hsieh" (the filing of Chinese characters) system of converting characters into a numerical sequence (from 1/00000 to 5/99999). This system was devised by the editors, with William Hung as editorin-chief, of the Harvard-Yenching Institute Sinological index series, as a more satisfactory means of indexing in Chinese, to replace the conventional system based on radicals and numbers of strokes, which is considered obviously cumbersome. Efforts have been made to perfect the system so that there will be only one character to each number for all 47,000 characters of the K'ang Hsi dictionary.

Arrangement of the Trindex is by the Kuei Hsieh system, with Wade-Giles romanization given for each character, its serial number in Giles, its location in the K'ang Hsi dictionary, and the rhyme-character under which it is found in the P'ei Wen Yün Fu.

Grammar and Conversation

458

Brandt, IAkov. Wenli particles. Hong Kong, Vetch and Lee, 1973. 178 p. PL1133.B7 1973

(Chinese-English)

[Reissue of the 1929 edition, published by The North China Union Language School, Peiping]. Contains 194 most frequently used Wenli particles, classified in 27 groups, as in Introduction to Literary Chinese, by the same author. The first part of the book consists of the classification of the particles including: adversative particles; assimilative particles; causal p.; comparative p.; conditional p.; conjunctive p.; consequential p.; equalizing p.; exclamatory p.; final p.; individual p.; initial p.; intensifying p.; intensifying-conjunctive p.; interrogative p.; limiting p.; p. of approaching action; p. of completed action; p. of definite judgement; p. of imperative force; p. of time; prepositional p.; prohibitive p.; purposive p.; signs of the passive; signs of the plural; and superlative particles.

The second part is the table of particles arranged alphabetically according to Wade-Giles romanization, with illustrative examples taken from different styles, together with English translations. There is appended a New Latin concordance to Wade-Giles romanization.

Dobson, W. A. C. H. A dictionary of the Chinese particles with a prolegomenon in which the problems of the particles are considered and they are classified by their grammatical functions. [Toronto, Buffalo] University of Toronto Press [1974] 907 p. PL1239.D56

(Chinese-English)

This dictionary treats of some 694 particles ("hsü tzu")—the "nuclei" of the grammar of classical Chinese. The entries are arranged alphabetically by the Gwoyeu Romatzyh system, but a table of conversion is provided from Wade-Giles to Gwoyeu Romatzyh. There is also a radical index.

The prolegomenon discusses the problem of the particles, and explains the catagorization of the particles, that is, how the grammatical words are treated categorically in relation to the class to which they belong: Grammatical words occurring in word-formation and word-group formation; in the verbal sentence; in the determinative sentence; and at the inter-sentential level. Other categories are: substitution, and blunted usage.

Giles, Herbert A. A dictionary of colloquial idioms in the Mandarin dialect. Shanghai, A. H. de Carvalho, 1873. 65 p.

PL1125.E6G64

(English-Chinese)

This is one of the early English-Chinese dictionaries compiled to help the student who found it difficult to master everyday expressions in colloquial Mandarin (kuan hua). Idioms in the Peking dialect, however, were omitted. About 1,000 common expressions in Chinese are included. These are translated into English and arranged alphabetically in groups of idioms according to key-word. The author was British Consul at Ningpo when the dictionary was published.

Phonetic Dictionaries

Han yü p'in yin tzu tien. [Chinese phonetic dictionary] [Singapore] Chih li yin shua ch'u pan kung ssu [1974?] 125 p. PL1455.H34

(Chinese-English)

A pocket-size dictionary containing about 1,800 entries of common colloquial Chinese words and terms, with Pinyin pronunciation and tones indicated, and with simple English translations. Arrangement is alphabetical according to the Pinyin romanization of the head character of each entry.

There is a companion edition entitled Romanization Mandarin Dictionary (see 429), which is according to the Wade-Giles system.

469

Karlgren, Bernhard. Analytic dictionary of Chinese and Sino-Japanese. [n.p., 194-?] 436, [703]-898 p. PL1455.K3 1940z

(Chinese-English, with English index)

This work places emphasis on the phonetic side of the study of Chinese script and is based on Chinese dictionaries arranged according to rhyme. It contains about 5,000 Chinese characters arranged in 1,350 phonetic groups and listed alphabetically by romanized Mandarin in the author's own system (Karlgren: "Grammata Serica"). Cantonese pronunciation, as well as ancient Chinese and Sino-Japanese (Chinese loan words introduced into Japan) pronunciations are given, together with English translation and analytical annotations for each character. There is an English alphabetical index.

Pages 703-898 are reproduced from the author's Etudes sur la Phonologie Chinoise, in French, and form a dictionary of Chinese dialects.

Po chia hsing. Piao chun Ying wen i yin Pai chia hsing Ch'ien tzu wen. Standard phonetic of Pai chia shing [and] Chien tzu wen in English. Hong Kong, Shih chieh ch'u pan she [1955] 99 p. PL1185.P53 Orien China

(Chinese-English)

In the book's preface, the author states that the object of this volume is to give Chinese characters a standard phonetic value. However, rather than conforming to currently accepted systems of romanization, the author appears to have devised his own systems of phonetic values, and has rendered them for all the characters of the Pai chia hsing (Book of family names), and the Ch'ien tzu wen (One thousand characters in rhyme) in Mandarin, Cantonese, and Southern Fukienese (Chaochow and Swatow). There is also appended a list of major countries of the world in Chinese and English.

(English-Chinese)

First published in 1936, this edition was in its 26th printing in 1949. It contains about 50,000 single word entries in an elaborate format which includes, as indicated in the Chinese title, four types of material, each given a separate label, relating to: 1) Explanations and definitions in Chinese, including examples of idiomatic use; 2) composition, which includes illustrative sentences; 3) grammatical terms and their explanations; and 4) distinctions in the shades of meaning of related synonyms. There are appendixes of a list of abbreviations and a list of irregular verbs.

466

Chang, Ch'i-ch'un. Chien ming Ying Han tz'u tien. A concise English-Chinese dictionary. Peking, Shang wu yin shu kuan, 1972. 18, 1211 p. PL1455.C49 1972 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

Contains over 26,000 entries, with about 13% basic words, 55% general words, 19% specialized terms, about 8% new and current terms, 3% international place names, and 1% abbreviations, labelled in many cases for subject category, and grammatical function, etc., and with examples of use given, which are also translated into Chinese. The Chinese equivalents are in simplified characters.

There are several appendixes: A list of personal names, the ranks of the British armed forces, grades of the U. S. armed forces, weights and measures, and signs and symbols.

167

Chang, Hsiang-mei Han, and Shirley Maxwell. A concise English-Chinese dictionary. [Hollywood, Calif.] M. Rodd Co., 1944. 191 p.

PL1455.C52

(English-Chinese)

This is a concise dictionary of about 4,000 words carefully selected by the authors as being the commonest in the English language and listed alphabetically. The book was said to be "the only English-Chinese dictionary published in America" at the time, and was designed to help Americans, Britishers, and others to obtain a working knowledge of the Chinese language. For each English word, the Chinese equivalent is given, together with an "approximation" of the pronunciation of the Chinese term, to help the student who does not know the Wade-Giles romanization forms, which are also given. An appendix contains the list of radicals, and a list of numeral adjuncts or classifiers.

(English-Chinese)

The main text of this work is identical with Cheng Yi-li's Tsui hsin hsiang chieh Ying Hua ta tz'u tien (see 473). It also contains the same addenda of 34 pages which appears in some editions of the other volume. However, it includes a seven-page "addenda (2)," which was apparently compiled by Cheng Meng-k'ai. The Chinese index, which is contained in some editions of the other work, is omitted here.

[Analytical charts of English vocabulary] Hong Kong, Shang wu yin shu kuan, 1961. xxiv,
330 p. PL1455.C56

(English-Chinese, with English index)

Lists 382 word roots or word stems alphabetically, with alphanumerical designations, such as A-1, A-2, B-1, B-2, etc., and gives over 5,000 derivations, with charts analyzing the words into their various parts, i.e., their roots and stems. For example, A-18: "aqua" meaning water, is a word root of aquamarine, aquarium, aqueduct, etc. Chinese translations are given for each of the derived words, which are listed alphabetically in an index. There is also an appended list of prefixes and suffixes, with examples and Chinese explanations of their use.

470

[Ch'en, Chia-jui] A new English-Chinese dictionary. [Shanghai, Chun Yui Books Co., 1912] 1128 p. PL1429.C5

(English-Chinese)

The main text of this dictionary is identical in format and pagination with another dictionary, English-Chinese Dictionary, by Lu Shu-jen (see 496), published much later, in 1957.

According to the preface by the editors, Tokyo, dated May 20, 1910, "All the English words are clearly explained in (English) as well as in Japanese." The dictionary, however, actually contains about 20,000 single English words, with English definitions, and Chinese translations of the definition, and some idiomatic expressions in English with their Chinese equivalents. The same appendixes, with slight variations, are included in the earlier version.

Chen, Janey. A practical English-Chinese pronouncing dictionary; English, Chinese characters, Romanized Mandarin and Cantonese. Rutland, Vt., C. E. Tuttle Co. [1970] xxix, 601 p. PL1455.C579

(English-Chinese)

Compiled with the needs of the missionary in mind, this is a concise dictionary containing 15,000 words, giving both the Mandarin and Cantonese pronunciations along with the Chinese characters. Words and phrases useful for students of Chinese who are members of the armed forces are also included, and there are a number of good appendixes for religious terms, service terms, and simplified and original Chinese characters. The author was for ten years a teacher at the Taipei Language Institute in Taiwan and at the Chinese Language Center, New Asia College, the Chinese University of Hong Kong.

(English-Chinese)

Contains about 7,500 entries of "the most commonly used words and expressions in English together with their equivalents in modern Chinese, for the purpose of furnishing aid in the practice of conversation to those who are studying Chinese". For each entry, there is provided the romanized standard pronunciation of the Chinese according to Wade-Giles. There is also a brief explanation containing suggestions on the use of the Wade-Giles system. The dictionary is the outgrowth of an attempt to fulfil the needs of trainees of the Asiatic Area and Language Unit of the Army Specialized Training Program established at Stanford University in the 1940's.

Chiang, K'o-ch'iu. A new English-Mandarin romanized dictionary, specially prepared for Mandarin students, [Syonan, Chin Fen Book Store, 194-?] 192 p. PL1455.C59

(English-Chinese)

Designed to be practical and simple, and to help students of Mandarin, especially in Southeast Asia, this book contains about 11,000 entries listed alphabetically in English, with the meanings and pronunciation given in ordinary, everyday, colloquial Mandarin according to the Wade-Giles romanization. The author also compiled Chinese Idioms in Romanized Mandarin (see 99).

475

Chinese and English dictionary, compiled from reliable authors. [Ying Hua tzu tien] New York, American Tract Society [1893] 344 p. PL1455.C6

(English-Chinese)

Although the title page gives the title of Chinese and English Dictionary, the main text of the dictionary retains the caption title of English and Chinese dictionary and is a reprint in reduced format of the dictionary compiled by K'uang Jung-chieh (see 491) and published in Shanghai in 1884, containing about 17,000 entries. There is added at the end of the book the Lord's Prayer in Chinese, and the story of the prodigal son in English and Chinese.

PL1455.C643 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

Designed to meet the needs of the intermediate level Chinese student, this issue is a major revision of the original Model English-Chinese Dictionary of 1929 (see 497), which by 1949 was in its 96th printing. About 1,200 entries (50 pages) were added, and about 300 entries not usually used by students were deleted, making a total of about 44,000 entries.

The appendixes of the previous edition are retained, and others are added, including abbreviations used in writing and printing, and a list of irregular verbs.

Commercial Press English and Chinese pronouncing dictionary. Comprising 100,000 words and phrases, with translations, pronunciations, etymologies, definitions, illustrations, etc., also a copious appendix. 3d ed. Shanghai, Printed at the Commercial Press, 1903. 1835, 22, 8, 2, 19 p. PL1455.C64 1903

(English-Chinese)

As stated on the title page of the dictionary, this work comprises some 100,000 words and phrases, with translations, pronunciations, etymologies, definitions, and illustrations. In the introductory note, it is stated that this volume is based on, and attempts to enlarge upon and correct, the English and Chinese dictionary published by Dr. William Lobscheid in 1866 (no copy available in LC collection).

The dictionary has bilingual definitions and explanations in English and Chinese; and accordingly, as the introductory note points out, this work will often merely give an "explanation of words" rather the equivalent translation into Chinese.

The appendixes include a list of foreign familiar phrases, a list of abbreviations, and a list of geographical names, all translated into Chinese. A larger and more complete edition, edited by Yen Hui-ching (see 481), and entitled English and Chinese Standard Dictionary, comprised 120,000 words and phrases, and was published in 1908.

Condit, Ira M. English and Chinese dictionary. [Ying Hua tzu tien] New York, American Tract PE1130.C4C6 Society [1882] 134 p.

(English-Chinese)

This small dictionary, compiled by the Reverend I. M. Condit, a "missionary to the Chinese", was undoubtedly meant to be used for teaching English to Chinese residents in the United States, especially in New York. It contains over 6,000 different words, and more than 1,500 sentences or phrases illustrating the meaning of the words. Words in most common use were included. Entries are listed alphabetically, with Chinese definitions given.

Doolittle, Justus. Vocabulary and hand-book of the Chinese language. Romanized in the Mandarin dialect. Foochow, Rozario, Marcal, 1872. PL1455.D7

(English-Chinese, with some Chinese-English appendixes)

This work is "in two volumes comprised in three parts". Volume I, Part I, contains the Vocabulary proper of "the most useful terms in the Chinese language with their equivalents in English". Arrangement is by English-Chinese alphabetical listing, and the Chinese translations, numbering 66,000 phrases, are romanized in Wade-Giles.

Part II, in Volume II, contains 10,000 additional English clauses or sentences with their Chinese equivalents. These do not contain less than five Chinese characters in the translation. Part III, in Volume II, is like an elaborate appendix of a multitude of interesting and useful tables contributed by various "gentlemen living in China". Whether in Chinese and English, French, German, or Latin, or in two or more of these languages, the total number of phrases or clauses in Chinese in Part III is over 26,500. Included in this Part are chronological tables; lists of terms on many subjects, such as mechanics, diplomatic and official intercourse, Buddhism and Taoism, cosmogony and mythology, music, medicine, and shipping; lists of proverbs, weights and measures, geographical names, and all kinds of miscellanea.

PL1455.C65

(English-Chinese)

This revision of previously published Commercial Press English and Chinese dictionaries (see 481, 510, 513) is very much in the same format as the others, particularly the Pronouncing Pocket Dictionary, except that it is arranged in two columns instead of one. The text is much the same, and this dictionary also has about 30,000 words with Chinese translations only, and with no English definitions, and few examples of use. However, the revisions are not insignificant, with obsolete words and unimportant derivatives omitted, and modern words and scientific terms added. The appendix also has a list of foreign words and a list of abbreviations translated into Chinese.

PL1455.Y5 1914

(English-Chinese) This voluminous work adopts Nuttall's Dictionary (standard edition) as a basis, and inserts thousands of words from Webster's Dictionary. Its editor-inchief was Dr. W. W. Yen (Yen Hui-ch'ing). It contains 120,000 words and phrases with definitions and translations into the Chinese. In the appendix, there are an English-Chinese list of geographic names, and an English-Chinese biographical dictionary of world figures with birth and death dates given. The range of subjects include religion, philosophy, history, travels, poetry, fiction, economics, and also the natural sciences; and many of the entries are labelled according to subject field.

This dictionary, when first published in 1908 (date of preface), superseded the Commercial Press English and Chinese Pronouncing Dictionary (see 477), published in 1903, which comprised 100,000 words and phrases.

English-Chinese dictionary. [Ying Han tz'u tien] T'ai-chung, Hsin kuang shu tien [1974] 397 p. PL1455.E5 1974 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

Contains 3,367 English words listed alphabetically, with examples of use, and Chinese equivalents, as well as International Phonetic System pronunciation. Of the total, 2,132 words are marked with single asterisk, denoting that they are the most commonly-used words, it being recommended that they should be memorized. In addition, 520 words are marked with double asterisk, with the recommendation that they must be memorized. Labels are given the Chinese translations to indicate grammatical functions, such as parts of speech, plurality, gender, case, and tense. There is an appended list of irregular verbs with Chinese translation.

PL1423.F3 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

Designed to help students of English "cope with exams", by presenting English words in a format that makes them easy to learn; remember; understand; and use. An introduction contains illustrative helps for learning English, including chart explanations of grammatical rules.

The main text lists about 12,000 entries of English words most of which include idioms and phrases using these as key words, examples of their use in sentences, and picture illustrations, all with Chinese equivalents. For many entries there is the added feature under the heading "Questions to be studied for use in exams", which contains a variety of material including synonyms, antonyms, related words, and shades of meaning and connotations to be noted.

(English-Chinese)

A pocket-size dictionary containing about 10,000 entries of individual English words, with brief English and Chinese definitions, grammatical helps, examples of use in compositions, and correct pronunciations of words often pronounced incorrectly. Thus in the Chinese title, it is specified that the dictionary has five uses. There are also appendixes of lists of irregular verbs, and prefixes and suffixes.

PL1455.H4

(English-Chinese)

Based on the dictionary by G. C. Stent (see 504), this work adopts the same general format and contains about 45,000 single word entries, with terms and phrases, translated into the standard Chinese spoken language, or "kuan hua", with Wade-Giles transliteration of the Chinese characters. Included are: vulgar or "slang" terms; book, documentary, and newspaper terms; modern terms; and about 30,000 standard scientific terms,—making the dictionary a veritable handbook for translators. Though primarily intended for the benefit of foreigners translating into Chinese, it can of course also be used by Chinese reading books written in English.

(English-Chinese)

Originally published by the Commercial Press in 1923 under the title, Webster's Collegiate Dictionary with Chinese Translation (Ying Han shuang chieh Wei shih ta hsüeh tzu tien), this monumental work contains 125,000 entries of single English words, with about 100,000 idioms and expressions, together with Chinese translation. The dictionary has about 3,000 illustrations; and the appendixes include those on abbreviations, arbitrary signs and symbols, biographical names, a pronouncing gazetteer, common English given names, rhymes, and a list of colleges and universities in the United States and Canada.

(English-Chinese)

An early English-Chinese dictionary containing about 17,000 entries, lithographed on double leaves of rice paper. Later, reprinted by the American tract society, New York, under the title Chinese and English Dictionary (see 475) in 1893; and also incorporated into Wong Su King's An English and Chinese Dictionary (see 512). Some of the entries contain examples of idiomatic usage.

Li, Rumy. A practical English-Chinese, Chinese-English pocket dictionary. Shanghai, Chung Hua Book Co. [1931] [962] p. PL1455.L55

(English-Chinese; Chinese-English)

Divided into two parts. The first part contains about 11,000 definitions of single English word entries, listed alphabetically, with Chinese translations of the definitions. Included are a number of useful appendixes, as foreign words and phrases translated into Chinese, and various helps to better English.

The second part is Chinese-English and contains about 8,400 entries of Chinese words or word-combinations, with designations as to the parts of speech, and with English gloss. Arrangement is by stroke number. An appendix contains brief lists of names of places in China and abroad and names of some famous people of the world.

(English-Chinese)

Designed for middle school, or intermediate level, students, the original version, based on The Thorndike-Barnhart Handy Dictionary, was first published in Taipei in 1955. It was revised and enlarged in 1962, with 40,000 entries added, and contains many illustrative usages as well as idioms. There are appendixes of a list of irregular verbs, a table of weights and measures, and a table of world monetary units.

Fuller dictionaries with more extensive coverage in vocabulary have been compiled by the same author, including: the Far East English-Chinese Dictionary (see 495) and A New Practical English-

Chinese Dictionary (see 494).

494

PL1455.L63 1970 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

This dictionary was designed to make up for the deficiencies of two others compiled by Liang Shih-ch'iu: A New English-Chinese Dictionary For Middle Schools (11,000 words, enlarged by 40,000 additional entries in 1962) (see 493), and Far East English-Chinese Dictionary (75,000 words, but few examples of use) (see 495). The present work, of about 40,000 single words and 200,000 idioms and illustrative examples of use, contains many added modern terms, common sayings and practical expressions.

The 1970 revision contains over 80,000 words,

and 300,000 phrases.

PL1455.L64 1963 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

Following the publication of A New English-Chinese Dictionary for Middle Schools, also edited by Liang Shih-ch'iu (see 493), the need was felt for a larger pocket-size English-Chinese dictionary containing a more extensive vocabulary and including terms in many subject fields such as modern science, international politics, sociology, education, economics, politics, medicine, and the arts. Emphasis was thus placed on wider, fuller coverage, and the result has been a dictionary of 75,000 words as compared with 11,000 in the earlier dictionary. For the most part, this dictionary also stresses Chinese definitions of the word entries, and there is less material included on illustrative examples of use, and on idiomatic expressions.

Another dictionary by the same author, A New Practical English-Chinese Dictionary (see 494), adds many new terms and phrases not found in either of the two aforementioned dictionaries.

Chung hsüeh sheng ch'u pan she, 1957. 1142 p. PL1455.L8

(English-Chinese)

Contains about 20,000 single words with English definitions, and Chinese translations of the definitions, as well as idiomatic expressions and their Chinese equivalents. The appendixes include: irregular verbs, prefixes and suffixes, glossary of foreign words, abbreviations and contractions, and proper names.

The main text of the dictionary is identical with another dictionary, A New English-Chinese Dictionary, by Ch'en Chia-jui, published in 1912 (see 470), but the appendixes vary very slightly.

497

Model English-Chinese dictionary with illustrative examples. [Ying Han mo fan tzu tien] Shanghai, Commercial Press, 1934. xvi, 1431 p.

PL1455.M58

(English-Chinese)

First published in 1929 with Y. W. Wong (Wang Yün-wu) as editor-in-chief, this edition is the 28th printing of the dictionary. It gives the spelling, pronunciation, and meaning of the English words, and also "illustrative phrases and sentences" to show correct usage, as an aid to composition. This was considered an innovative feature for English-Chinese dictionaries at the time.

This issue contains 35,000 entries, and includes new words and phrases which gained currency during the post-World War 1 period. It contains some appendixes: synonyms and antonyms, uses of prepositions, and accentuation and capitalization (all untranslated); and foreign words and phrases with Chinese equivalents.

A major revision of the dictionary was published in 1965 under the title, Chung pien Ying Han mo fan tzu tien (see 476).

A Modern dictionary of the English language with Anglo-Chinese explanations. [Hsin shih Ying Hua shuang chieh tz'u tien] [Editors-in-chief: Chang Sze-yi and Marcus W. Sund. 17th ed.] Shanghai, Chung Hwa Book Co. [1941] xvi, 1141, xxvii p. PL1455.M595 1941

(English-Chinese)

Based on Webster's New International Dictionary, this volume contains about 23,000 single word entries, with explanations in English and Chinese. Unlike some other English-Chinese dictionaries, this one has few if any examples of idiomatic expressions and illustrative sentences. There is an addenda of about 700 words; and an appendix of measures, weights, metric system, money, and decimal equivalents.

A later edition, using the identical main text, was published under the title A Model English-

Chinese Dictionary (see 517) in 1958.

499

A Modern English-Chinese dictionary, giving pronunciations, definitions and translations of a large vocabulary of words in common use, and thousands of phrases of frequent occurrence, with an appendix containing various useful tables. Shanghai, Commercial Press, 1931. lxviii, 1555 p. PL1455.M6

(English-Chinese)

Based on Webster's Academic Dictionary, but includes other words from a variety of sources, as well as idiomatic phrases from many books, the dictionary, as indicated in the subtitle, gives pronunciations, definitions (in English and in Chinese) of a large vocabulary of (about 40,000) words in common use, and thousands of phrases of frequent occurrence, with an appendix containing various useful tables. Illustrative phrases and sentences, on the other hand, were purposefully omitted so as not to overload the dictionary with examples of usage.

Prefatory materials and appendixes include a guide to pronunciation, proper names, foreign language phrases, and abbreviations.

(English-Chinese)

This dictionary is the 10th printing of the original version first published in 1955 in Taipei; it contains 11,000 entries. The revised and enlarged version, with 40,000 entries added, was published in 1962 under the same title, and cataloged under the name of the Editor-in-chief, Liang Shih-ch'iu. (see 493)

A practical English-Chinese dictionary [Shuang chieh shih yung Ying Han tzu tien]; Editors: T. H. Lee, P. W. Kuo, B. E. Lee. [Shanghai] Commercial Press [1935] xiv, 1674 p.

PL1455.P8

(English-Chinese)

Based on the Winston Simplified Dictionary, and supplemented by the Oxford, Webster, Standard, and Century dictionaries, this work was designed to be a handy and comprehensive one, for the use of the average student and businessman. The Model English-Chinese Dictionary (see 476), on the other hand, also published by the Commercial press, was compiled with intermediate level students in mind.

This volume contains the following special features: 1) clear and simple definitions; 2) a large vocabulary, with Chinese and English definitions of 52,000 English words; 3) synonyms and antonyms for 1,000 entries; 4) 4,000 idiomatic and colloquial expressions; and 5) an appendix of 2,400 business terms and abbreviations.

An innovative feature is that there are English and Chinese explanations of the synonyms and antonyms, with illustrative sentences. There are also, for the various entries, over 32,000 illustrative sentences showing correct usage of the words and idioms.

Shih, Lin. Ying Han t'u hua tz'u tien. The picture dictionary of English. Shanghai, Ch'i ming shu chü [1949] 145 p.

A253.5.S61 Orientalia Chinese

(English-Chinese)

This is a dictionary for beginners, and its presentation is in the simplest terms. It recognizes that pictures may be used to help recognize words, and also add interest, and interest is a help to memory. There are about 600 entries of the most common English words, the parts of speech these words may be used as, and the Chinese equivalents. Three examples of use in English are given, with their translation into Chinese. For each entry there is a pencil sketch of a related picture.

(English-Chinese; Chinese-English)

A pocket-size edition similar to the Commercial Press English and Chinese Pronouncing Pocket Dictionary (see 510), but containing about 20,000 single English words with Chinese translations, and also a Chinese-English section of 20,000 words and word combinations arranged according to stroke number with Chinese index provided. The English-

Chinese part was based on Webster's Little Gem Dictionary, and Yuhodo's Miniature English-Japanese Dictionary.

(English-Chinese)

The author, an Englishman who joined the Chinese Customs Service in 1869, based this work on his A Chinese and English Vocabulary, first published in 1871, the third edition appearing in 1898 (see 433). The dictionary contains about 15,000 single word entries, some with only Chinese translated equivalents, others with examples of idiomatic use and illustrative sentences, and all with translations into colloquial Mandarin Chinese, and also the Wade-Giles transliteration of the Chinese characters. The last third of the work was revised by K. E. G. Hemeling, who also prepared a Supplementary List of Words and Phrases at the end of the book. Hemeling later enlarged this work into the English-Chinese Dictionary of the Standard Chinese Spoken Language (see 485) published in 1916, which contains about 45,000 entries.

PL1455.T77 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

Contains about 65,000 entries of single English words listed alphabetically, with English definitions and Chinese translations, and also with idioms and examples of use. Labels are used in the Chinese translations denoting grammatical functions, subject fields, etc. There are a number of appendixes, including a list of foreign words with Chinese equivalents, a list of abbreviations, and a list of 2,000 common English phrases with Chinese translation.

A253.5.Y57 Orientalia Chinese

(English-Chinese)

Though having the same publisher as Liang Shih-ch'iu's English-Chinese dictionaries (see 493–495), this dictionary's format and material are closer to the volumes compiled by Cheng Yi-li (see 473). The similarity with the latter makes it almost appear as a condensed version of the same. It contains about 18,000 single word entries, with idiomatic uses and illustrative examples, together with their Chinese translations. The entries are culled from newly published dictionaries of the times, including: The Concise Oxford dictionary, Universal English Dictionary, The American College Dictionary, and Webster's Collegiate Dictionary.

PL1455.T83 1948 Orien China ——— Another edition. 1949.—1502, 63, 172 p. A253.5.H86 Orientalia Chinese

(English-Chinese)

Compiled with the aid of a score of scholars, and based on standard western dictionaries, such as Oxford, Webster, Standard (Funk & Wagnall), and Century, this mammoth dictionary contains over 130,000 entries of single words, phrases, foreign words, abbreviations, and names of persons and places, including about 74,000 idioms, and 60,000 examples of use. The entries are labelled for grammatical function, country of origin, and subject field; do not contain English definitions, but do contain idioms and examples of use, together with Chinese translation. Almost every field of the social and natural sciences is covered. The appendixes include a pronouncing gazatteer, biographical dictionary, list of common English Christian names, and list of Chinese geographical names. The revised edition contains a 63-page addenda of modern terms, including many of a technical nature.

(English-Chinese)

Contains about 20,000 entries of English word entries, with explanations in English and Chinese, similar to A Modern Dictionary of the English Language (see 498), also published by Chung Hwa. However, the contents of the two dictionaries, especially the English explanations, are totally different.

The foreign derived words are preceded by the sign of two parallel lines, and the American slang words by an asterisk. There is an appendix of abbreviations (untranslated), and also addenda of supplementary words and abbreviations.

PL1455.W2

(English-Chinese)

Similar to, but somewhat fuller than, the Commercial Press English and Chinese Pronouncing Pocket Dictionary (see 513), which has only about 30,000 single English words, and no phrases, while this work has 40,000 words and phrases or examples of use, which are translated into Chinese. In turn, the Commercial Press' 1921 English and Chinese Standard Dictionary (see 481) is a much enlarged version of this work, with 120,000 words and phrases. A list of abbreviations with English translations is included in the appendix.

Williams, Samuel Wells. Ying Hwa Yun-fu Lihkiai [Ying Hua yun fu li chieh] An English and Chinese vocabulary in the court dialect. Macao, Chinese Repository, 1844. lxxxviii, 440 p. PL1455.W6

(English-Chinese, with Chinese radical index)

Contains over 12,000 entries of English words with Chinese equivalents and their romanized pronunciation in the "general language of the country" as exhibited in the syllabic part of Morrison's dictionary, called here the court dialect, and at that time, usually but improperly called the mandarin dialect. There is also a Chinese index of the characters arranged by radical, with romanizations in the court dialect, Cantonese, and Amoy (Fukienese). Thus the feature of the work was to make it useful for foreigners to speak the two provincial dialects.

Included in the introduction are lists of syllables in the court dialect with corresponding sounds in four other dialects, a list of homophonous characters in the court dialect, and lists of syllables in the Cantonese and Fukienese dialects.

PL1455.W75

(English-Chinese; and Chinese-English classified vocabulary)

The first part of this dictionary incorporates the same main text, though with slightly different type-setting, of K'uang Jung-chieh's dictionary (see 491).

The second part contains a Chinese-English vocabulary, classified according to various subjects of common everyday interest, such as: Professions, furniture, food for foreigners, medicines, silks, precious stones, and musical instruments,—51 categories in all. A Cantonese transliterated pronunciation is given the English terms. Finally, there is a bilingual collection of miscellaneous items, including forms of business letters, bills, documents, and tariff schedules of that period.

(English-Chinese)

This pocket edition was first published in Shanghai by the Commercial Press in 1904; and by 1920, it was in its 21st edition, having been revised in its 11th edition in 1913. It contains about 30,000 single English words, with Chinese translations only, and with no English definitions and few examples of use, which are included in other English-Chinese dictionaries of the Commercial

Press (see 510, 481: Yen Hui-ch'ing, Wang Tso-t'ing, etc.). The appendix has a list of abbreviations and a list of foreign words translated into Chinese.

(English-Chinese)

Designed to be a simple, reliable, and practical compact English-Chinese dictionary, this work contains about 13,000 numbered entries of common words and expressions in the arts, education, science, sports and music, as well as basic terminology in the military and other fields. The Chinese equivalents are given in Yale romanization, for which the Chinese characters are separately listed. There is also a conversion table of various romanization systems, including the Chinese phonetic symbols, the Yale system, and Wade-Giles.

(English-Chinese)

First published in 1936, the main text of this dictionary is basically the same as that compiled by Chan Wen-hu under the same English title (see 465). However, about 1,000 new words or meanings were added, resulting in about 300 changed pages. Also added was a supplement of about 5,000 new entries. The appendixes retain the list of abbreviations and list of irregular verbs, to which are added a pronouncing gazatteer.

(English-Chinese)

Based on Thorndike's Century Junior Dictionary and Fowler's Concise Oxford Dictionary, this pocket-size dictionary was designed to have four uses: definition, composition, idioms, and translation. The earlier edition contained 20,000 single English words, with Chinese definitions, plus 10,000 illustrative sentences, and 4,000 idioms, to which were added 2,000 new words and terms in the 1963 revised version.

There are appendixes of: synonyms and antonyms, irregular verbs, uses of prepositions, and abbreviations.

Yüan yeh ch'u pan she, Hongkong. A model English-Chinese dictionary; with Anglo-Chinese explanations. [Mo fan Ying Hua shuang chieh hsin tz'u tien] [with an addenda of 1500 words] Hong Kong, Yüan yeh ch'u pan she, 1958. 10, 1136, 27, 43 p. PL1455.Y8

(English-Chinese)

The main text of this dictionary is identical with that of A Modern Dictionary of the English Language with Anglo-English Explanations (see 498). However, there is an addenda of about 1,500 words, and the appendixes include lists of the parts of speech, irregular verbs, antonyms, and synonyms, with the section on measures and weights, etc. omitted.

English-Chinese Dialects

English-Amoy

518

Tipson, Ernest. A pocket dictionary of the Amoy vernacular; English-Chinese. Singapore, Lithographers, 1934. 215 p. PL1706.T5

(English-Chinese)

Contains about 10,000 entries of English words and phrases, with their Chinese equivalents in the Amoy vernacular, listed alphabetically English-Chinese. No Chinese characters are given, but only the romanization, which was said to have become standard and was used in books and publications issued in Kolongsu (Ku-lang-hsü).

English-Cantonese

519

Ball, J. Dyer. An English-Cantonese pocket vocabulary: containing common words and phrases, printed without the Chinese characters, or tonic marks, the sounds of the Chinese words being represented by an English spelling as far as practicable. 2d ed., rev. and enl. Hongkong, Kelly & Walsh, 1894. 23 p.

PL1736.B3 1894

Kelly & Walsh's English-Cantonese handbook.
6th ed. Shanghai, Kelly & Walsh, 1935.
92 p. PL1736.B3 1935

(English-Chinese)

Contains about 600 entries of common words and phrases listed alphabetically English-Chinese, with no Chinese characters given, but only the Chinese equivalent represented by an English spelling of the romanization in the Cantonese dialect. Not designed for serious study of the language, but for strangers and tourists in China wishing to "pick up a few words" of the language.

520

Chalmers, John. An English and Cantonese pocket-dictionary, for use of those who wish to learn the spoken language of Canton Province. [Ying Yüeh tzu tien] 3d ed. Hongkong, Printed at the London Missionary Society's Press, 1870. 146 p. PL1736.C52 1870

(English-Chinese)

Contains about 7,000 entries of common words, listed alphabetically English-Chinese, with Chinese characters given and their Cantonese pronunciation. Designed for English-speaking people learning to speak the Cantonese dialect.

521

Wells, Herbert R., comp. An English Cantonese dictionary. [Ying Yüeh tzu tien] Hong Kong, Kelly and Walsh, 1931. 227 p. PL1736.W4

(English-Chinese)

Largely based on Chalmer's English and Cantonese dictionary (see 520), which it updates, revises, and enlarges upon, this work contains about 11,000 entries of common terms, listed alphabetically English-Chinese, with Chinese characters given as well as their Cantonese pronunciation. The romanization is that used in Cantonese Bibles, the tone marks being given by numbers.

English-Hankow

Grosvenor, M. Donald. A colloquial English-Chinese pocket dictionary in the Hankow dialect. Shanghai, Printed at the Presbyterian Mission Press, 1925. 269 p. PL1869.Z5G7 1927

(English-Chinese)

Contains about 4,000 entries of common English words, listed alphabetically, with equivalents in Chinese. The Chinese characters are given with their romanized pronunciation in the Hankow dialect, which is very similar to the Wade-Giles romanization system.

English-Ningpo

523

Morrison, William T. An Anglo-Chinese vocabulary of the Ningpo dialect. Rev. and enl. Shanghai, American Presbyterian Missions Press, 1876. 559 p. PL1976.M6 1876

(English-Chinese)

Contains about 9,000 entries of common English words, listed alphabetically, with examples of use in English phrases and expressions, which are translated into Chinese, in the Ningpo dialect romanized, and with Chinese characters given. There is an alphabetical list of 762 syllables in the Ningpo dialect, and an appended list of geographical names English-Chinese.

English-Swatow

Duffus, William. English-Chinese vocabulary of the vernacular or spoken language of Swatow. Swatow, English Presbyterian Mission Press, 1883. 302 p. PL2126.D8

(English-Chinese)

The vocabulary is based on a manuscript work by the Rev. R. Lechler, which was based on one by Dr. S. Wells Williams. There are about 6,000 entries of common English words listed alphabetically with the Chinese meaning or equivalent given in the Swatow dialect romanized, and with no Chinese characters given. A section entitled "Remarks" contains an explanation of the system of romanization.

Grammar and Usage

Hsia-men ta hsüeh. Wai wen hsi. Ying yü ch'eng yü tz'u tien. [Dictionary of English idioms] Hong Kong, Shang wu yin shu kuan, 1974. 1898 p. PE1689.H7 1974 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

Contains over 25,000 entries of alphabetically-listed key words used in phrases and expressions, most of which are labelled with abbreviated descriptors in Chinese, showing their nature, subject category, origin, and grammatical function. The terms, whether they be idioms, common expressions, proverbs, or slang, are translated into Chinese, and are frequently followed by one or more illustrative examples showing how the terms are used in sentences, some of which are cited from well-known literary works. There is also an appendix of foreign words and phrases, with Chinese translated equivalents.

526

Huang, Te-hsin. Ying wen wen fa tz'u tien. The dictionary of grammar. Hong Kong, Hsiang-kang shih chieh ch'u pan she, 1956. 229 p. PE1111.H6865 Orien China

(ENGLISH-CHINESE)

Recognizing that a good knowledge of English grammar is essential to learning the English language, this dictionary lists alphabetically about 500 important terms used in English grammar, and gives explanatory definitions and illustrative examples of them in both English and Chinese. Included are such terms as: "conjunction," "personal pronoun," "predicate," "imperfect tense," "subjunctive mood," and "possessive case."

527

Ko, Ch'uan-kuei. Ying yü kuan yung fa tz'u tien. A dictionary of English usage. [New rev. ed.] Peking, Shih tai ch'u pan she, 1962. 720 p. PE1628.K62 1962 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

A new revised edition of Ying yü yung fa ta tz'u tien, which had the same English title and was published in Shanghai in 1942. About one percent of the original text was deleted as being unsuitable for use in New China, or as being "childish" in nature. The original text was enlarged by about one-third.

The number of entries is about 3,500, and the listing is alphabetical. After the English entry, there is no definition or equivalent given in Chinese, but rather one or more illustrative examples and explanatory comments as to how the word is used, expressed in bilingual format.

Ni, Hao-sen. An Anglo-Chinese dictionary of abbreviations and contractions with explanatory notes, by N. Y. Nieh. [Ying Han shuang chieh. Hsiang chu lüeh yü tz'u tien] Shanghai, Commercial Press, 1923. 224 p. PL1455.N5

(English-Chinese)

Compiled from other related dictionaries, and modern commercial publications of the time, and intended for the use of business men as well as persons in government service, this dictionary contains about 5,000 entries of abbreviations and contractions, listed alphabetically, with Chinese equivalents, and with explanatory notes in English. There is an emphasis on commercial abbreviations, but entries relating to other subjects are also included.

529

Ni, Jui-cheng. Tu yin t'e shu ti Ying yü tan tz'u hui chi. [Collected English terms with special pronunciations] Peking, Shang wu yin shu kuan, 1963. 44 p. PL1488.E6N5 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

Contains seven parts, all English-Chinese: 1) about 80 names of persons and places with special pronunciation, as Greenwich, Leigh, etc.; 2) about 100 words with one or more letters not pronounced, as colonel, indict, etc.; 3) about 140 homonyms, as rite, right, write, etc.; 4) about 90 terms with pronunciation similar to foreign pronunciation, as liaison, monsieur, etc.; 5) about 120 heteronyms, as agape, hinder, irony, etc.; 6) about 250 words with special pronunciations not according to general rules, as goal, zincify, etc.; and 7) some brief notes on pronunciation.

General Subject Dictionaries

Chang, Ching-an. Hsin wen i chih shih tz'u tien. [New dictionary of literary knowledge] Hong Kong, Chiao yü shu tien, 1960. 25, 359 p.

AG17.C5 Orien China

(Chinese-English)

Although its title refers to "literary knowledge," the dictionary actually contains approximately 1,600 selected modern terms in the fields of literature, philosophy, education, sociology, history, and general science. Technical terms in specialized disciplines such as mathematics, chemistry, and military affairs, are omitted. Each entry contains explanations in Chinese, and not merely simple definitions. Arrangement is by stroke number. Only a limited number of the entries are translated into English, but most of the Western names have English equivalents.

531

Chung-hua pai k'o tz'u tien. [Chung-hua encyclopedic dictionary] [Shu Hsin-ch'eng, editor in chief. Rev. and enl.] Shanghai, Chung-hua shu chü [1936] 1 v. (various pagings)

AG17.C58 Orien China

(Chinese-English, with English index)

More than 100,000 sources are said to have been used as reference materials in compiling this encyclopedic dictionary, which contains more than 12,000 entries in its main text and an additional 2,000 entries in an appended supplement. The majority of the entries contain English equivalents. They consist mostly of technical terms and names of persons and places and are labelled according to field of study, the proportionate number of terms being: 34 percent in the social sciences, 26 percent in the natural sciences, 18 percent in literature and the arts, 8 percent in mathematics, 7 percent in the applied sciences, and 6.5 percent in philosophy.

Arrangement of the entries, which contain explanations in Chinese, is by stroke count, number of characters in the term, stroke count of the second character, etc. There is also a Chinese index to page numbers, and an English alphabetical index of about 6,000 names and terms.

The appendixes supply various tables and charts, including a name list of provinces and administrative areas of China in the early 1930's, and an excellent 90-page chronological chart of Chinese history.

PL1455.H78 1964a Orien China

(English-Chinese)

A monumental and modern English-Chinese encyclopedic dictionary, this work, issued in single-volume and two-volume editions, contains over 140,000 entries with comprehensive coverage of subject matter, including idiomatic terms and phrases as well as scientific and technical terminology from many fields, such as physics, chemistry, biology, and medicine. The terms are by far, mostly nouns, but interspersed with some verbs and adjectives.

533

Ku, Chih-chien. Hsin chih shih tz'u tien. [New knowledge terminology] Shanghai, Pei hsin shu chü [1935] 364 p.

A252.K95 Orientalia Chinese

(CHINESE-English)

This work is considered by its author to be a kind of cultural history, or small encyclopedia. It contains over 2,000 entries of Chinese terms relating to current or new knowledge covering more than 10 fields, including: politics, economics, sociology, law, international relations, philosophy, literature, the arts, the natural sciences, famous names of persons and places, and general terms in everyday use. The Chinese terms are arranged according to stroke number, and English equivalents are given for almost all entries. The entries contain detailed Chinese explanations.

534

Shih chieh chih shih nien chien. Shijie zhishi nianjian. [Yearbook of world knowledge] Peking, Shih chieh chih shih ch'u pan she, 1958. 1011 p. AG17.S5 1958 Orien China

(Chinese-English-polyglot)

While not strictly a dictionary, this work is valuable for Chinese transliterations and English (French, Russian, etc.) equivalents of names of persons and places, and also of many organizations throughout the world, according to Chinese Communist usage. A sequel to the Shih chieh chih shih shou ts'e 1957 (Handbook of world knowledge 1957), the book is designed to be a comprehensive reference tool, with coverage of international political, economic, and cultural affairs. It contains five sections: 1) General national surveys; 2) international organizations and conferences; 3) special statistical data; 4) chronology of world events; and 5) miscellaneous convenient tables and charts. Equivalents of perhaps as many as 4,000 names may be found here.

535

T'ang, Ching-kao. Hsin wen hua tz'u tien. An encyclopedic dictionary of new knowledge. Shanghai, Shang wu yin shu kuan [1924] 1107, 69, 88 p. C259.T17 Orientalia Chinese

(English-CHINESE, with Chinese and English indexes)

Contains about 1,200 entries of terms relating to politics, religion, economics, law, sociology, philosophy, literature, the arts, psychology, ethics, education, and the natural sciences, listed alphabetically in English, and with lengthy Chinese explanatory annotations. There is a Chinese index arranged by stroke number, and also an English index of many of the English names and terms appearing in the written text.

PL1420.W33 1963 Orien China

(Chinese-Chinese, with English-Chinese index of technical terms)

This is a Chinese-Chinese dictionary, arranged by the four-corner system, with an index by stroke number. It is included in this bibliography because it also contains an English-Chinese index or glossary of about 4,000 technical terms.

The main Chinese text is simpler than the Tz'u hai, and specializes in terms and expressions of modern usage.

Polyglot Dictionaries

Ch'en, Lin, ed. Kamus Bahasa Malayu. [Ma lai yü tz'u tien: Chung Ying shuang chieh (Dictionary of Malayan terms: With Chinese-English equivalents)] Hong Kong, Ying yü ch'u pan she, 1958. 479 p. PL5125.C5

(Malayan-Chinese-English)

Contains about 10,000 entries of common Malayan terms listed alphabetically, with Chinese and English equivalents.

539

Desderi, Paolo. Piccolo dizionario cinese, italiano, francese, inglese. Little dictionary in Chinese, Italian, French, English language. Torino, Rosenberg & Sellier, 1933. xiv, 439 p.

PL1441.D4

(Chinese-Italian-French-English)

This dictionary of 10,000 Chinese characters with Wade-Giles romanization given for each entry is arranged according to a "new morphological classification," which, though interesting, has not gained much currency. A radical number based on the 214 radicals of K'ang-hsi is also given to each entry.

540

The Japan times' Japanese-Chinese dictionary. [Tokyo] Hara Shobo [1959] 356 p.

PL678.[3

(Japanese-English-Chinese, with English index) A condensed version of The Japan Times' 6-Language Dictionary (see 541), but retaining only the materials in the three languages, Japanese, English, and Chinese. The English alphabetical index is also included.

541

P361.J3 Orien Japan

(Japanese-English-German-French-Russian-

Chinese, with English index)

A polyglot dictionary of six languages, including Japanese, English, German, French, Russian, and Chinese. Listed alphabetically according to the Hepburn romanization system of the Japanese language, the dictionary is arranged in six parallel columns and contains about 10,000 entries of "living" words, that is, words that are in current use. There is an English alphabetical index, and numerous useful appendixes, including rules of grammar of the six languages and lists of the numerals, the months, country names, personal names, weights and measures, monetary units, conventional phrases, and abbreviations.

For the Chinese equivalents, the simplified characters are used, and the romanization in Pinyin is given.

542

Li, Joek Koey. Tsung ho Hua Wu Ho Ying ta tz'u tien. A classified dictionary of Chinese-Malay-Dutch-English with Chinese pronunciation. Batavia, Kuo Min Book Co., 1948. 163, 293 p. PL1441.L5 Orien China

(Chinese-Malay-Dutch-English, with Chinese index)

This dictionary has two sections, both of which are Chinese-Malay-Dutch-English. The first part contains about 2,500 Chinese terms arranged according to 110 subject categories, with a Chinese index by stroke number cross-referenced to the category number. The second part contains approximately 3,000 Chinese word-combinations arranged by stroke number. Selection of the vocabulary was on the basis of frequency in daily use, and obsolete words are omitted. The compiler is also author of A Complete Malay Grammar for Overseas Chinese.

543

Liu kuo yü tz'u tien. 6-language dictionary; fu Ying yü so yin. [Taipei] Wen hua t'u shu kung ssu [1973] 613 p. PL678.L5 1973

(Japanese-English-German-French-Russian-

Chinese, with English index)

This contains the same main text of The Japan Times' 6-Language Dictionary, published in Tokyo (see 541), except that for the Chinese equivalents the simplified characters are replaced by their traditional complex forms, and the Pinyin romanization is omitted. Although the rules of grammar of the six languages are omitted, the other appendixes and the English index are retained. The complex characters are also used in the appendixes.

544

Lu, Chin. Chinese-English-French dictionary, featuring a modern practical Chinese script. [Chung Ying Fa tsung ho tz'u tien] [n.p.] 1945. xxii, 702 p. PL1441.L8

(Chinese-English-French, with English, French and Chinese indexes)

This work contains a selection of about 25,000 common Chinese words and expressions with English and French translation. Arrangement is alphabetical according to an "Interdialect Romanization," invented by two sinologues, X. L. Lyaqc (Liang Heng-li) and S. R. Myunh (Min Shih-jen) in 1930. In the appendix, there are an English and a French index, and an index of 5,000 single Chinese characters arranged by radical with equivalent romanization. The system of romanization used has found not too much currency: As an example, "to lodge a protest" (t'i ch'u k'ang i) is romanized "dhiaecchyut khaqsqyes".

PL493.U52

(English-Korean-Japanese-Chinese; Korean-English-Japanese-Chinese) Japanese-English-Korean-Chinese; and Chinese-English-Korean-

Japanese)

Published as an aid to instructors, students, and translators concerned with the Korean, Japanese, and Chinese languages, this dictionary is in four parts, each containing the same 4,801 entries of common Oriental terms, but listed under different arrangements: Part 1 is listed alphabetically English-Korean-Japanese-Chinese; Part 2 is Korean-English-Japanese-Chinese according to the McCune-Reischauer system of romanization; Part 3 is Japanese-English-Korean-Chinese according to the modified Hepburn system of romanization; and Part 4 is Chinese-English-Korean-Japanese according to the Wade-Giles system. For all entries, the part of speech is indicated. Included are common terms concerning war, politics, economics, social problems, psychology, industry, agriculture, mining, commerce, history, religion, family, and medicine.

Terms and Phrases

Ch'en, Chia. Ying Han shuang chieh Ying wen ch'eng yü ta tz'u tien. A dictionary of English phrases with Chinese translation, by Chen Gear. Kowloon, Shih yung t'u shu ch'u pan she, 1957. 1249 p. PL1455.C578

(English-Chinese)

One of the most complete dictionaries of this type, it contains about 8,000 key word entries and over 20,000 phrases, arranged alphabetically by the key words. English explanations are given for the phrases, as well as the Chinese translation, and also, for some entries, examples of use. Many of the phrases are labelled for subject field, part of speech, literary usage, or language origin. There is an appendix of a "Glossary of foreign phrases in English literature" containing about 2,500 entries, with Chinese translation and English explanation.

548

Hall, Ronald A., and A. Neville J. Whymant. The 3000 commonest Chinese terms. London, Luzac, 1948. 213 p. PL1455.H3 1948

(English-Chinese, with English index)

The earlier form of the work was entitled English-Chinese Memory Dictionary, and this dictionary is compiled with the idea in mind that memory plays an all-important part in the learning of Chinese. Making use of the principle of "association of ideas," the vocabulary selected is presented under 40 topics related to matters of daily living, such as weather, school, travel, clothes, food, and houses. The English terms listed are translated into Chinese, with romanization given in the Wade-Giles system. There is an alphabetical index of key words used in the main text.

549

Hsien tai chih shih hsin tz'u tien. [New dictionary of modern knowledge] [Hsiao Tsan-yü and Teng Kung-hsüan, chief editors] Taipei, Pa t'i shu chü [1953] 1 v. (various pagings)

AE17.H75 Orien China

(Chinese-English)

Compiled by more than 40 experts, this dictionary contains terms in more than 14 categories, including: philosophy, politics, economics, military affairs, international law, education, literature and the arts, history, geography, overseas affairs, and biography of world figures. Definitions and explanations of the entries are given in Chinese. If the term was originally translated into Chinese from the English, then the English equivalent is given. Nationalist-oriented, the dictionary includes a number of appendixes which contain the Constitution of the Chinese Nationalist Government, and name lists of Nationalist officials. The dictionary contains more than 5,000 entries arranged according to subject. There is a Chinese index of all entries by stroke number; not all the terms have English equivalents, and there is no English index.

(CHINESE-English)

Compilation of this revised version of Hsin chih shih tz'u tien, published in 1948 (see 551) was undertaken at the same time as the enlarged supplementary edition under the title Hsü pien Hsin chih shih tz'u tien (Supplementary edition of New knowledge terminology) (see 554), and it was meant to be used as a companion volume of the latter. This New edition contains about 3,500 entries of Chinese terms relating to new knowledge of current events arranged by stroke number, with Chinese explanations, and mostly with English equivalents. Many of the terms relate to Marxist ideology. The 1971 issue is a reprint of the 1951 edition.

PL1497.H78 1952 Orien China

(CHINESE-English)

This is an enlarged supplementary edition to Hsin chih shih tz'u tien, published in 1948 (see 551), and revises its main text considerably. It also adds an extensive list of terms in a section entitled K'ang Mei yüan Ch'ao shih shih hsüeh hsi hsiao tz'u tien (Small glossary for the study of current events relating to the Resist America, Support Korea War), which contains 96 pages in the 1951 edition, and 147 pages in the 1952 edition. Many of the terms in this small glossary, however, do not have English equivalents given.

There are several appendixes with materials related to knowledge of current events of the times, in Chinese only, and without English translation.

At the same time, another revised version of the Hsin chih shih tz'u tien was compiled under the title Hsin pien Hsin chih shih tz'u tien (see 553), containing more Marxist ideological terms, and to be used as a companion volume to this one.

(English-Chinese, with English index)

The format and arrangement of this glossary are unusual. After a lengthy foreword in Chinese concerning various aspects of the compilation of the glossary, the main text of the work is presented in four lists of English terms, each alphabetically arranged, with their Chinese equivalents: A list of 2,108 entries of the minimum number of common English words; and three lists of 1,191; 1,149; and 1,138 entries respectively according to their degree of frequent use.

There follow: A list of 277 entries of common English terms in the social sciences; a list of 343 entries of common terms in science and technology; a list of 101 common abbreviations; a list of 102 common personal names; and a list of 208 common geographical names. The total number of all entries is 6,617; and there is an English index with cross-reference to page number.

Ko, Ch'uan-kuei. Ying Han shuang chieh hsin ch'eng yü tz'u tien. The new English phrases dictionary. Rev. & enl. [Hong Kong] Ching wen shu chü, 1956. 615 p.

PL1455.K6 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

Contains about 7,000 entries of idiomatic phrases, listed alphabetically, the meanings of which are explained in English, followed by the Chinese translated equivalent. Many entries contain examples of use, which, however, are not translated. Foreign phrases (Latin, French, etc.) are included in the main text, and not listed separately.

This dictionary is a revision of The Standard Dictionary of English Phrases, compiled by Li Chihyün (see 557) and issued by the Commercial Press in 1927.

Li, Chih-yün. The standard dictionary of English phrases, with bilingual explanations. [Piao chun Ying wen ch'eng yü tz'u tien] Shanghai, Commercial Press, 1927. 897 p. PL1455.L5

(English-Chinese)

Contains about 7,500 entries of English idiomatic phrases, taken from such dictionaries as the Century Dictionary, New Standard, and Webster's International. The entries are listed alphabetically by the first word of the phrase or expression, the meanings of which are explained in English, followed by the Chinese equivalent. Examples of use are given in some entries, but are not translated.

A revised edition, published in Hong Kong in 1956, has a new title and new compiler, Ko Ch'uan-kuei (see 556).

Lung, Chuan-fei. Ying wen ch'eng yü hsin tz'u tien. A new dictionary of English phrases. Taipei, Hua kuo ch'u pan she [1952] 188 p. A253.5.L98 Orientalia Chinese

(English and polyglot-Chinese)

Although the title names this work as an English dictionary, it actually contains many phrases and idiomatic expressions of foreign origin, such as Latin, French, German, and Spanish, and these are all labelled with special abbreviations. There are about 5,000 entries, arranged alphabetically by key word, and all the entries have bilingual explanations in English and in Chinese.

560

Mao, Yao-ming. Ying wen hsin tzu tz'u tien. A dictionary of new English words. [Taipei] Wen kuang t'u shu kung ssu [1964] 391 p. PL1455.M33 Orien China

(English-Chinese)

Contains about 7,000 entries of selected modern terms and phrases, such as "Sputnik" and "Terylene", including many slang expressions, and labelled according to country of origin, and subject field, listed alphabetically in English, with Chinese equivalent. Stress is given to "new English words", and the fields covered are broad and varied, including history, philosophy, chemistry, pathology, and poetry. There is appended a lengthy list of abbreviations.

Published in March 1964 in Taiwan, this dictionary has the identical main text and list of abbreviations as another with the same title published in Hong Kong in February 1964 with K'uang I-wen as editor-in-chief (see 490).

Morgan, Evan. Chinese new terms; rev. and enl., with English translations, classifications, introduction and index. [Chung Ying hsin ming tz'u tien] Shanghai, Kelly & Walsh, 1932. xiv, PL1455.M65 1932 614 p. 1926. 525 p. PL1455.M65 1926

(Chinese-English, with English index)

Two previous editions had appeared before the 1932 edition, which contains about 10,000 entries, or about 2,000 more than the 1926 edition. The arrangement is alphabetical according to Wade-Giles romanization of the head characters. There is a brief list of supplementary terms, and an appendix entitled: Part II. Cognate words and definitions. This contains an analysis of Chinese terminal words classified. Part III. contains the English index. The words and terms were gathered from newspapers, magazines, and books; and cover most topics found in such source materials.

Title Index

Chinese and English titles are intermixed in this title index. If a work has both English and Chinese titles, both are included under separate listings; and if a title in Pinyin appears in the source work, that is also listed individually. The Wade-Giles system of romanization, the Library of Congress's accepted standard, is used to romanize all Chinese titles. Titles are listed in Pinyin romanization as well as in the Wade-Giles version.

When different works appear under the same title, the call number is appended for precise identification.

The numbers after each listing correspond to the bibliographic entry numbers in the main text.
